PEGGY VISITS
By LOUISE OLIVER.

Dear Priscilla: This place is immense. I'm so glad they named me after Aunt Margaret. But never mind, when she dies and leaves me all her money and this beautiful house I'll divide, honest—cross my heart I will! I and my little trunk arrived safely yesterday. This morning, after breakfast, I was wandering over the house, when I came upon a sort of office which opened out of the conservatory. I went in. And there I saw the grandest looking man you ever gazed upon. When I saw the man I started to retreat, but he didn't give me time. He was beside me in an instant, holding out his hand and saying, "You are Miss Holdship, aren't you?" So I gave him my hand and while he shook it I said: "Yes, I'm Peggy Holdship. Who are you?" "I'm the private secretary," he explained, "and Mrs. Harworth asked me to show you around."

I started to talk about Migs, the Use of Plants and Animals

Whether in the vegetable kingdom or the animal kingdom life is sacred. It is a responsible position in which man is placed where by his superior intellect he is given authority over plants and animals.

To neglect so great opportunity for beautifying the earth and advancing humanity by cultivating and selecting plants and by breeding and feeding desirable animals seems unpardonable. Animals are a part of God's creation and man will be held responsible for the manner in which he cares for them.

That animals and plants should be used as foods none will question. That seems the primary use of these creations. But the critical test comes in the work we do and the service we perform for nature, and the relation we bear to humanity.

How do we advance civilization in our use of plants and animals? To waste the products of the soil is to withhold food and raiment from those who need it. To be unjust and cruel to animals is to abuse nature's best friends and man's valuable allies. Tenderness and sympathy to dumb animals show those fine qualities of humanity that distinguish the intelligent. Only cowards would abuse those creatures which cannot speak for themselves. —Farm and Ranch.

pup, and soon we were gossiping as though we had known each other a thousand years. He showed me all over the house and grounds and really, Silly, I'm going to see that you get to come next time. It's all so grand; I must stop now and dress for dinner.

Lovingly, PEGGY.

Friday, November 4.

Dear Silly: It was a man, and who do you suppose it was? You'll never guess. Bernard Portman! I knew him the instant I saw him. He looks just like the magazine pictures. And so rich, Aunt Margaret says, he could almost buy out Rockefeller. His wife died last year, you remember. Well, he's looking for another, I hear. Do you know, Silly, I'm beginning to feel queer. The way Aunt Margaret talks and so on makes me suspicious about her intentions. And she's ordering me more clothes, and today we're going shopping to a jeweler's.

I saw Adonis—I mean Jack Roland—for ten minutes this morning. We were talking in the hall when Auntie came along. In plain English, she was mad and sent him away on some errand. He is grand, Silly. I wish I could see more of him. He has lunch with us, but that's all, and from what I gather, with all the festivities being planned ahead, we will be home so seldom there will be no chance of seeing him even then. He is awfully smart, too; seems to know everything and says he prepared for law. He's certainly hiding his light under a bushel here. I don't take as much interest in all the excitement as I did at first. If Auntie only didn't fuss so, I'd much prefer to improve my time by talking to the secretary. He knows so many people everywhere, the best people, too, if you please. I must stop.

Hastily, PEG.

Sunday, November 13.

Dear Sister: Such a whirl as it has been since I wrote last. From 12 m. until 3 and 4 a. m. we hardly stop. I don't know how Aunt Margaret can stand it, but she is a perfect Spartan and determined to see me well chaperoned. One thing is clear, however, she leaves me alone with B. F. every chance she gets. In fact, all mamma's do. It's as plain as the nose on your face that he is the catch of the season. But I feel like calling him papa, and if he and Auntie have fixed up anything between them they can get over it. After tea I'm going to tell you something about Jack.

After Tea—Here it is. Yesterday I was up at eight, and after breakfast I went to see how some of the new Japanese sunfish in the fountain were doing. Quite by accident I saw Jack. And, Silly, dear, before I knew what he was saying, he told me he loved me, and before I knew what I was saying, I told him I loved him, too. And he kissed me, and I ran away, and I haven't seen him since. If Aunt Margaret finds it out she'll send me home and cut me off with a shilling, but I shouldn't care, if I thought you'd get it all instead of me. Oh, what shall I do? I love Jack and I can't bear old Portman. I just hate being thrown at any one's head! I've about made up my mind to tell Aunt Margaret the truth in the morning, give her back the pearl necklace and the bracelet and bandeau and the furs and everything, and then pack my trunk for home. But then there's Jack! He'll lose his position if I tell. Oh, I don't know what to do.

PEGGY.

Tuesday, November 15.

Dear Silly: Just a note. I'll write details tomorrow. I'm the happiest creature alive, for the most amazing things have happened. Aunt Margaret planned it all. She has known Jack for years and wanted me to fall in love with him. She said if I had known about it I'd have been contrary and fallen in love with some one else! Girls always do. So she persuaded Jack to be her secretary and asked me here on purpose. She said her little opposition just helped it along, and I guess it did. But you'll never believe me when I tell you the rest. Bernard Portman is Jack's uncle and he knew all about it, too, and Jack is his heir. Everybody is so happy! And I most of all.

Lovingly, PEGGY.
