The Women's Choice

Several days ago the Women's Civic Club of the Second ward of Chicago, Ill., advertised in the newspapers for an aldermanic candidate. It was announced in the advertisement of the club the successful applicant would have to be:

A clean, respectable citizen. A Possessor of horse sense, not necessarily a college graduate.

A friend of woman suffrage. An advocate of subways. A voter for bathing beaches and playgrounds.

A leader, not a follower. A man of constructive ability. Six replies were received. The applicant were a machinist, a broker, a clergyman, a manufacturer, a physician, and a saloonkeeper.

The announcement of the lucky candidate awarded the support of the club through the unique competition was made Friday night at a meeting at 3555 Cottage Grove Avenue. The saloonkeeper won. He is Al Russell, proprietor of a saloon at 3559 South State street, and he met every requirement. The unsuccessful applicants who answered the women's advertisement are: Earnest Gissler, E. L. Dempsey, F. M. Schiacks, Edward M. Carey and Dr. John Kersher.

INFLUENCE.

Just as soon as you begin to think or do something you begin to have influence. Influence is something you can't keep at home. And when it gets away from you you can never recall it. Your influence makes you something of somebody else. Influence has no boundaries. Once started, though it may seem ever so trifling, yet it may have as its destination the farthest corners of the earth. If you would get a conception of power, realize the influence of a strong man—George Matthew Adams.

BIG FRENCH ARMY TO ATTACK RHINE

Report Says Joffre Now Plans to Carry War into Germany.

GALLIENI TO LEAD FORCES.

The Object is to Bring Horrors Home to Kaiser's Subjects, While Cities Will Be Ransomed and His Troops Compelled to Withdraw from the North. Feverish Haste in Preparations.

The invasion of upper Alsace, combined with a south to north movement along the Rhine, is learned on the most trustworthy authority, is the foremost feature of the French plan to carry the war into Germany, says a London correspondent.

The present French activity in upper Alsace and the Vosges and the bombardment of the Metz forts—of which nothing has been said officially—are the first steps in the great scheme, but the general offensive will come soon, when the French armament makers have given the army a clear superiority in heavy guns.

A captain deputy on fifteen days' leave from the east to attend the brief meeting of parliament in Paris said in the lobbies of the chamber of deputies: "More quickly than is generally believed we shall strike a swift and deadly blow at Germany from the southeast of the battle line."

General Joffre declares he could end the war by the early spring if the re-enforcements of 1,000,000 troops from England could be put in the field at once. But as their training is not complete that is out of the question. Nevertheless Joffre means to give the Prussians, Wurttembergers and Bavarians a taste of military invasion before many weeks have passed.

A Threefold Object.

The new plan, which has been worked out in detail since the deadlock on the Aisne and in Flanders was established, is designed with the triple object of bringing home to the German people the horrors of war, ransoming German cities near the Rhine and forcing the Kaiser to withdraw his troops from the north.

The allies' original plan for clearing France and Flanders was based on the assumption that the Muscovite army would rout Von Hindenburg in Poland and thus make the German retreat in the western theater of the war a strategic certainty.

When, however, it was realized Von Hindenburg was capable of holding up the Russians in Poland for an indefinite period the French general staff was confronted with the problem of devising a powerful offensive movement in the west.

Of the two alternatives of striking the Germans violently all along the line or throwing an army across the Rhine near Eribourg, General Joffre selected the latter because it is more likely to succeed and will cost fewer lives.

General Gallieni, the present military governor of Paris, will command the forces which will make the attempt and which will be called the army of the Rhine.

If he succeeds Gallieni will be made a marshal of France, not because his work will necessarily be finer than that already accomplished by General Foch, De Castelnau, Dubail and others, but because he will have fulfilled the tacitly formulated army regulation which came into force after the 1870 war that future French marshals must fish up their batons in the Rhine.

Simultaneously the same dignity—a marshalship is a dignity, not a rank—would be conferred on Joffre.

Rapidly Pushing Preparations.

Meanwhile preparations for the "coup" are being pushed ahead with feverish haste. Thousands of workers have been withdrawn from the trenches and garrisons and sent to the great armament factories of Creusot and Schneider for the intensive manufacture of guns.

It is also a positive fact that 10,000 artisans are employed at Creusot's hastily building light transportable iron bridges, which will be thrown across the Rhine for the French army to pass over the river.

I also learn from a creditable military source, continues the correspondent, that the French are making a heavy shell gun which will eclipse Krupp's famous seventeen inch mortar. Its caliber is given as twenty inches, and it fires a ton and a half of explosives and metal with every shot.

In addition to this gigantic death dealer and other heavy guns of smaller caliber, Creusot is making thousands of six inch limbers, so called after their inventor, a lieutenant colonel now serving in the army.
