MUSEUM NOTES

By PAUL A. F. WALTER.

That the study of archaeology is the foundation for all culture, is emphasized in the new book, a monumental volume, "The Civilization of Babylonia and Assyria," by Morris Jastrow, Jr., of the University of Pennsylvania, who spent several days in Santa Fe this summer, the guest of the School of American Archaeology. Mr. Jastrow is one of the foremost Semitic scholars of the world, and realizes as perhaps no other scholar, that the study of archaeology is the foundation for all culture, is emphasized in the new book, a monumental volume, "The Civilization of Babylonia and Assyria," by Morris Jastrow, Jr., of the University of Pennsylvania, who spent several days in Santa Fe this summer, the guest of the School of American Archaeology.

"Flesh of Our Flesh"

In his preface he says: "The very remoteness of the home of the place, and of the time, constitute three reasons why its history, culture and religion should be of real interest to us, for the past, and more particularly the remote past, exercise an intense fascination upon us—a fascination due to the conviction, deep seated within us, that whatever we believe to be the present, the past belongs to us. The history of mankind is a continuous series of links, forming as Herder phrased it, the 'golden chain of culture.' Each civilization as it arises is the heir of the ages that have gone before, every phase of human culture stands in some connection with the preceding phase. In studying the past we are, therefore, in reality studying ourselves, we are concerned with something that is not remote, but with something that is quite close to us—with flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone."

Book Worth While

Despite its 500 pages and more, the book is one that holds the interest so closely as to make the reader feel loath to lay it down before it is finished. It is not a book of light reading—but it is written with an avoidance of technical terms and an absence of dreary scientific descriptions. Dr. Jastrow speaks as one with authority and yet presents opposing views impartially and fairly. The many illustrations add to the enjoyment of the text. It is a remarkable insight that is given into the life, the thoughts and ambitions of the people of the Euphrates and Tigris valleys four to six thousand years ago. Every once in a while the modern is stated by the modernity of the ancient. How humble one becomes upon learning that these men and women of thousands of years ago lived and loved, thought and dreamed, believed and achieved, much as humanity does at this day. The writer even sets forth how today owes much of its religion to the Babylonians, for he says: "The Old Testament is fairly saturated with Babylonian culture, and even when we reach the time and days of the New Testament we have not yet passed beyond the sphere of Babylonian influence."

Babylonia and Assyria with their teeming millions, were considerably less in area than New Mexico. Together they covered 88,000 square miles. Like New Mexico the country was arid and irrigation was practiced. The New Testament irrigation code very much resembles the irrigation laws of New Mexico. It was Babylonia that "was the home of cultivated cereals whence wheat and barley were disseminated throughout the ancient world. As in New Mexico, clay was a common building material and to that fact is owing in part, the disappearance of the great cities of the ancient Babylonia and Assyria, and anomalous as this may seem, also their preservation. Says Dr. Jastrow:

Adobe Palaces and Temples

"Clay being the only building material for houses, palaces and temples (remember the Old Palace, the mission churches, the Indian pueblos and Spanish Plazas of New Mexico) in the south, and the prevailing one in the north, the clay architecture must have happened during the two thousand years that elapsed between the desertion of the Babylonian and Assyrian cities and the effort to recover their remains. (Just what happened to the prehistoric civilization of the Valley of Mexico that the School of American Archaeology is excavating.) The buildings tumbled into shapeless ruins, and the winds sweeping the sand across the plains completed the destruction, and hid even the debris from view. Of the only remaining cities one saw only lone shapeless mounds. (Just as one sees them on every side in New Mexico.) And yet nature, in this covering up the work of man, proved to be a merciful destroyer. But for the mounds which formed over the ruins of the cities, the records of the past would have been entirely swept away or ruthlessly destroyed."

Land Grants in Babylonia

It is a fascinating, an astounding story, that the excavation of these mounds has revealed and Dr. Jastrow has written of in his book. A bible incident attacked by the higher critics, is verified by these discoveries and on every side are laid bare the evidences of a marvelous art and advancement. How modern it sounds, even to a Twentieth Century man, says Dr. Jastrow: "The business documents covered every phase of everyday occurrences, sale and hire of fields, rent and sale of houses, loans and receipts, contracts for work, reports of business agents, marriage divorces, last testaments and terms of adoption, and of all kinds of the decision of judges, and so on through the entire gamut of the records one might find in the legal archives of any municipality of the present day." He also tells of the finds of "some remarkable boundary stones, royal grants of land to royal officials," or in other words, the much discussed New Mexico land grants and their origin some three thousand years ago among the Babylonians. New Mexicans wrestling with the drainage problem in the Rio Grande valley, Dr. Jastrow will be interested to learn that in the Babylonian excavations, there have been found "a series of drain pipes laid in vaulted tunnels showing that at an early period a system for drainage had been devised."

The Original Muckraker

The political reformer and the muckraker, will read with deep sympathy and understanding the story of Uruckina who, in 2800 B. C. used his efforts to reform the various phases of the population—the various business, shepherds, fishermen and farmers, and the ruler class, into whose clutches they had fallen. This class had profited by the general prosperity and formed a powerful commercial organization which exercised a pressure on the land. Uruckina goes so far as to accuse the priests of reform and the fruit of his labors of imposing exorbitant taxes on the fishermen, of taking bribes and of thwarting justice in their capacity as the controllers of the courts of law. Uruckina sums up an end to this shameful state of affairs by sweeping the land free of all officials, out of office and by setting up a body of laws, regulating the taxes and fees, relieving the helpless against extortion, providing against violent alienation of goods or property. In his day, divorces had been obtained by the wife, and the husband, in fact, and even divination had been carried on amidst abuses, the extortion fee for the service being divided among the priest, his chief adviser and the priest. These matters were also regulated and a code of moral laws was given to Uruckina's new code did away with polygamy. Women were formerly possessed of two men. Now women in such a case will be thrown into the stream. Uruckina sums up the contract enigmatically between the former and the present by declaring that "formerly there was slavery, now freedom has been established." The movement for reform, however, came too late as it often the cause in history. The strength of the country had been sapped and in a long inscription dating from Uruckina's reign a scribe pathetically records the violent acts of the old time enemy, Umma, in invading and destroying the sanctuaries there and elsewhere. Uruckina suffered the fate of so many reformers in reaping the ingratitude of those whom he had secured the co-operation of the nobles and officials in arousing opposition to the endeavor of the king to deprive them of the benefits they had so long enjoyed."

Product of the Civilization

It is this that the civilization of Babylonia and Assyria stands revealed before us, in all its ramifications as one of the great forces in the ancient history of mankind, the direct or indirect influence of which is to be seen in many a phase of our modern culture. This struggle represents the natural process in the assimilation of two apparently incompatible elements. Civilization may be described as the spark that ensues when opposing ethnic elements come into contact. Culture, as it is stated by the modernity of the ancient, How humble one becomes upon learning that these men and women of thousands of years ago lived and loved, thought and dreamed, believed and achieved,

WHY DO YOU WORRY?

O, why do you worry and why do you fuss? It's dollars to doughnuts that things might be "wuss." Pray what in the world are you hoping to gain?

When, by day and by night, you simply complain? A laugh is worth more than a river of tears;

An ounce of bright hope by a hundred to one, And growing's a capital habit to slum.

To double your trouble and add to your care, Keep talking about them, yes, no matter where;

But would you get rid of your burden of grief? Forget that you have them, you'll soon find relief.

If nobody had any trouble but you, Do you know what I think to you would do?

We'd encase you in glass and write, "Here's a man Unlike any other since mortals began."

If we never had storms, no rainbows we'd see, And a very great loss that surely would be;

Take heart, and take hope, then, And live a life of glory. That to others the right way to live, you may show.

PAYMENT OF EDUCATORS EXPENSES TO N. M. E. A.

The expenses of teachers in attending the annual meetings of the New Mexico Educational Association are proper charges to be included in the estimates of yearly expenses by boards of education, according to Attorney General Frank W. Clancy, who has written an opinion on the matter for Miss Grace Goebel, superintendent of schools of Luna county. He holds, that the expenses of school superintendents in attending meetings of the national association may be properly paid from school funds. In his opinion he says:

"I have today received your letter of the 17th instant, asking whether a board of education can legally make an allowance in the estimate of expenses for attendance of the city superintendent of schools at the National and New Mexico Educational Associations, and also whether it is within the power and duties of boards of education and directors to allow for expenses, or partial expenses of teachers while attending the New Mexico Educational Association."

"The state superintendent of public instruction is by law the adviser of all school officers and I find that some time last fall he sent a circular to boards of regents, boards of education and boards of school directors on the subject covered by your second question, in which language: 'to be found in the following language: "Wherever the funds of the district permit, the expenses of the teachers should be paid wholly or in part from such funds. I recommended the payment of at least the railroad fare. It is a legitimate and proper expenditure—really an investment—as your teachers will thus be able to gain inspiration and practical suggestions for their work in your schools. It is largely due to the fact that so many teachers and school officers have met in these annual gatherings that New Mexico is making such rapid strides educationally in every part of the state."

"My impression is that this circular was issued only after consultation with my office and that we all agreed that such payments would be proper. If they are proper, as I believe they are, it would also be proper to include such matters in the estimate of expenses which the statute of 1915 requires to be submitted to you, and through you, to the county commissioners. You will find in the second paragraph of Section 3, at Chapter 70 of the Laws of 1915, that school directors and boards of education are required to provide school houses, furniture and fuel, teachers' wages and interest on school bonds, and to defray all other expenses connected with the proper conduct of the public or common schools. It appears to me, as it evidently did to the state superintendent last year, that such expenses as your letter asks about are expenses connected with the proper conduct of schools. There seems to be no doubt of the reasonableness of the deduction from attendance upon such educational associations, and it is clear, when we consider the meager salaries paid to school teachers, that a large portion of them cannot possibly bear the burden of travel and other expenses in attending the meetings without assistance from the public funds."

"I think the same reasoning would apply to the expenses of attendance of city superintendents at both the National and New Mexico educational associations. I can see, however, that there might be great danger of some abuse in the way of expenses for attendance on the National association, but the remedy for that is to be found in the power of the county superintendent and of the county commissioners to limit the estimates of expenses for this purpose or for any other purpose. "If I am informed that as a practical matter several county superintendents have attended meetings of the National Educational Association at the public expense and I believe that some city superintendents also have done so."

TEACHERS' EXPENSES.

There will be much interest in the opinion of Attorney General Clancy, published today, that the expenses of teachers attending the annual meetings of the state educational association and the expenses of superintendents to the state national conventions are properly included in estimates for yearly expenses by boards of education and a proper charge against the school funds. Nothing could be a greater benefit to the school work in the state than the inspiration the individual workers get from meeting and exchanging ideas with co-workers in state and nation. The stimulus of these meetings, and enthusiasm fostered by the co-consciousness of numbers, lasts through the year's work in every school room in the state. The opinion by Mr. Clancy is very timely as removing any doubts which may linger in the minds of school directors on the legality of the public bearing these expenses. No investment of any part of the school funds can bring richer returns than that spent on sending teachers to the state and national gatherings. —Editorial, May 20, 1916.
