Mrs. Disraeli's Economy.

Of the rigid economy practiced by Mrs. Disraeli there is one very good story told: Mrs. Disraeli and her husband had come down from London to spend the Easter vacation at Hughenden and had called on the various tradesmen at Wycombe to order the groceries and other requirements for their ten days' or fortnight's stay. It so happened that their sojourn was rather abruptly shortened, and Mrs. Disraeli was seen calling at the grocers and other purveyors, taking out of the carriage the nonconsumed wares and asking the shopkeepers to receive them back and have them reweighed and so to make a reduction in their accounts.

The great statesman, with folded arms, was leaning back in the carriage perfectly nonchalant, but evidently desirous to have no share in the frugal transaction. Such rigid economy was no longer required after the old lady who so admired his books died and left him her entire fortune, amounting to over £10,000.—London Tit-Bits.

Flight of the Woodcock.

Some writers have claimed that the woodcock is sure in his flight, never becoming entangled in briars or creeping vines when in swift flight through close cover. That may have been their experience, but is not mine. I have seen woodcocks when flushed in such spots become so entangled that they were forced to cease flying and drop to the ground to again make a new start in flying. I remember one old fellow that sat hidden before the stand of one of my setters until I almost stepped on him and then, rising nearly into my face, got tangled in a clump of ironweed and fell at my feet. Had I been so disposed I could have caught him in my hands, but my desire was to see if he was injured, and a moment later he proved that he was only a badly frightened woodcock, as he darted away through cover while I watched and laughed at him.—Amateur Sportsman.

"The Cornplanter Indians of Warren, Pa., and their kinsmen on the New York state reservations, are the repositories of a vast amount of aboriginal lore," says John Cowan in November Outdoors. "They have many 'signs' by means of which they claim to be able to foretell the character of the succeeding season with unerring accuracy. The wisest of their weather prophets, however, will not venture a prediction on the strength of any single sign, but observe all the natural phenomena supposed to have any bearing upon the question, and then make their prediction in accordance with the weight of evidence. The thickness of the season's growth of bark upon the hickory, oak, and maple trees; the size and number of cones upon the white pine and hemlock; the plentifulness or scarcity of berries on the wintergreen and partridge-berry vines; and the thickness of the outer hulls of hickory nuts and of chestnut burrs, are all carefully noted. The depth of the burrows made by the chipmunk, rabbit and ground hog is considered a safe guide; each of these animals being credited with the possession of sufficient foresight to delve well below the frost line. The size of the store of nuts laid away by squirrels, and the amount of honey gathered by wild bees are also said to furnish a safe basis for forming an opinion.
