Monday afternoon the wind blew one of the transoms out of the First State Bank. It fell down on a chair that was close to one of the large windows, and was thrown against the plate glass with such force that it was knocked out. It caused quite a bit of excitement as the first man on the scene was Oscar Sandusky and it was thought that he was trying to enter his barber shop via the bank building as there was money in it. He did not plead guilty so the blame has been attached as afore said, to the wind.
