

Special Recommendation
for Certain Crops.
By H. M. Bainer.

CORN—The methods described above are well adapted to this crop. No set rule regarding planting time can be safely given. With certain limitations moisture must be the controlling factor. In some years, early planting from April 15th to May 15th has given the best results. In other years it has proven best in altitudes above 6,000 feet to plant short-seasoned varieties such as Rustler White Dent and Australian White Flint, about June 1st and even a little later. The early varieties such as the two mentioned above, and in addition, Sterling White Dent, Minnesota King and Mexican (not June) have not proven satisfactory for the lower altitudes. We cannot advise definitely, when to plant Dwarf Mexican June and Hickory King, which are the varieties that do best below 5500 feet, but it is not often that a seed crop is made on plantings made after June 1st. To plant all of your supply of seed at one time is a gamble. The wise farmer who has not enough moisture stored to tide his corn over a probable drouth, will save at least a part of his seed for later planting. Seven and one-half pounds of seed per acre is plenty. The distance between plants in the row, should average 30 inches and the rows should not be closer than 3 1-2 feet. Under dry farming conditions in New Mexico, above 6000 feet corn is the best grain and silage crop.

KAFIR—Kafir must be considered as the best combined fodder, silage and grain crop for altitudes below 5000 feet, especially, if dwarf or early maturing varieties such as dwarf Black-capped white and white-capped white are used. The cultural methods described above, are adapted to this crop.

One peck of good seed is sufficient for planting 10 acres, particularly, if a seed crop is desired. For seed purposes single kafir plants are close enough in the row when they are from 24 to 30 inches apart. Under favorable moisture conditions, planting should be done early in May, however, June 1 is not too late.

MIL—This crop is adapted to altitudes but very little higher than 6,000 feet. In the lower altitudes it is our surest grain crop. Planting time will depend on the season in respect to moisture. The dwarf varieties, white and yellow are early enough to make it advisable not to plant before June 1st and very often as late as July 1. We recommend that single plants be from 20 to 24 inches apart in the row, the rows being 3 1-2 feet apart. One and one-half to two pounds of seed is sufficient to plant one acre.

CANE—This is one of the best and surest fodder crops for New Mexico conditions, for nearly all altitudes. For best results as a fodder crop, cane should be planted in rows and cultivated. Cane, alone makes a good silage crop, however, if mixed with one half corn or one half kafir at the time it is being stored in the silo. Seven and one half pounds of seed is enough to plant one acre in rows for cultivation. The seed should be planted whenever all danger of frost is past also depending on moisture conditions. Early amber (red) and white amber are good fodder varieties and early in maturing. For syrup making the Seeded Ribbon and Honey Drip varieties, are the best.

FETERITA OR SOUDAN DURRA. This is a new crop for New Mexico conditions. It belongs to the sorghum family. As a drought resistant crop it is equal to milo. The fodder is better than milo and the seed is equally as good. It requires about the same cultural methods as the other row crops already mentioned, and should be planted at any time between May 15 and July 1, depending on moisture conditions. For seed purposes this crop should be planted as thin as milo, 20 to 24 inches apart in the row.

PROSO OR BROOM CORN MILLET. No small grain or non-cultivated crop does as well during average years as a row crop. But proso millet and particularly the hog variety furnishes good chicken and hog pasture. Under favorable moisture conditions, the Black Vernonz variety makes excellent hay and is a very short season crop. Proso millet is adapted to practically all altitudes, but had best be restricted to tight soils. Proso requires no more than 20 pounds of seed per acre, which should be drilled in if possible with a press-wheel drill. Sow proso millet as early as June 1, especially if moisture conditions are favorable to keep the crop growing until the more dependable July rains. In the absence of moisture conditions, as described, we advise delaying planting until as late as July 10th.

COW PEAS—This crop is known as "Dry Farmers' Alfalfa." It is the best leguminous crop for altitudes below 5,000 feet. The hay made from this crop, including the peas, is almost equal in feeding value to alfalfa. The cultural methods described above are suitable to the production of being required. The crop should be planted between June 1st and July 1st depending on moisture conditions. We advise planting a small seed patch of this crop separately from the main field. This should be planted more thinly, it should be given special care and must also be protected from the rabbits. In harvesting this crop, the best hay is produced by gathering before it is thoroughly mature, or at the time the pods are turning yellow. A bean harvester is the best implement for gathering the crop, but if this cannot be secured, the crop can be plowed out by using a plow with the mold board removed. The best all-around variety is the crowder. They yield a fair vine and are early enough to insure seed. The black-eye is the surest seed variety, but makes very little vine. The whippoorwill is directly opposite to the black-eye in that it produces a great deal of vine and very little seed, this variety is not adapted to altitudes above 4,500 feet.

Take Plenty of Time to Eat.

There is a saying that "rapid eating is slow eating." If you have formed the habit of eating too rapidly you are most likely suffering from indigestion or constipation, which will result eventually, in serious illness, a loss of rest, digestion begins in the mouth. Food should be thoroughly masticated and swallowed. Then when you have a fullness of the stomach or feel dull and stupid after eating, take one of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many severe cases of stomach trouble and constipation have been cured by the use of these tablets. They are easy to take and most agreeable in effect. Sold by all druggists.
