On account of the number of speakers on both sides it was arranged to TO THE TRACHERS OF BEAVER forego the literary program which had been arranged except one song—a product of the fertile minds of Clear Creek and which was rendered by several of the charming young ladies of that neighborhood. The song was a

The speakers on the Beaver side were J. W. Culwell, who opened the debate with an eloquent and effect producing speech characteristic of the "leather-lunged 'orator"; W. T. closed the argument for Beaver with another promiseous fling of bratory which brought down the house. The negative speakers were Albert Seal, who gave a nice little Sunday school talk and also recited history in a manner that showed very plainly that he had prepared himself for the occasion; Frank Wright, a pupil of the Elmwood High School, distinguished himself as a speaker and the sarcastic flings he made at his opponents struck home. It wasn't hie fault that his side lost the question; Paul Ardrey made a bold stand for "Pride and Ambition"; J. E. Mitchell, chief pedagogue of the Elmwood schools, wasted lots of "sweetness on the desert air", in his attempt to earry a sweeping victory for the negative. His December 11 and ending January 12 most telling argument was that "in 1908. that very school house only a few weeks previous part of the same speakers had proven that the world was progressing"
