WANTS TO KNOW.

Whether Sidewalks Were Made for Big Cuspidor.

Editor The Chronicle:

I believe you will grant me a little space in The Chronicle to say a few words which may be of benefit in the way of putting people to thinking, and that may result in abating a very disagreeable practice.

In the early days of Clinton we women use to look forward to the time in the, as we hoped, not distant future when we should have sidewalks and could get about over the town and also escape the mud when the weather was wet. The good old board sidewalks came and served their purpose. We, as well as the men of the city, were glad of them, although at times the boards would warp and spring up a d holes appear which would spoil the symmetry and impair the usefulness of the whole. Then came, with city ways and waterworks, the beautiful cement sidewalks, which spoke much for the advancement of the little hamlet that we had seen grow from a few houses to a city upon which metropolitan ways sat as the gh natural to the conditions surrounding and growing from the push and hustle of our husbands, brothers and sons. Of course sweethearts are included in the general numbering.

Of course we know that in the west a great many men chew tobacco. Even Sam Jones did that, and when a good sister asked him why he did it he told her that he "chewed tobacco so he could spit red." While I may not approve of the reverend gentleman's habits I shall offer no criticism. It is conceded that one of the reasons, if not the main one, for men chewing tobacco is to give them a chance to spit red. This they should be at perfect liberty to do so as not to infringe upon the right guaranteed all people "To life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The American man should not be denied the right assumed but he should be good enough to not spit red, or indeed, any other color on our beautiful cement sidewalks. I believe it is done unthinkingly

But if one should carefully inspect the sidewalk in front of the post office they would reach the conclusion that some men were very careless, to say the least, and from appearance upon an ordinary day the conclusion would be that there were several hundred of him. I will grant that it is carelessness, and that he does not think when he does it, for no one would believe for an instant that there is a man in Clinton so lazy that he would not walk fourteen feet and spit into the street. He does not think of his wife, mother, sister or daughter trailing their skirts through the filth of some other persons wife, mother, sister or daughter doing the same thing. I believe the men of Clinton are chivalrous enough and clean enough to refrain from spitting on the sidewalk when they see how disagreeable and also how unsanitary it is.

I said "men" a few lines above but they are not wholly guilty. A few days ago I saw a boy apparently fifteen or sixteen years old standing, or rather lolling, against the brick pillar in front of the post office. His hair was nicely banged, pulled down over his forehead and his cap stuck on the back of his head. He looked for all the world like an Orinoco simian in a zoo. He was very much in love with his appearance and thought to add dignity to it by holding between his lips at the proper angle a vile smelling cigarette, and every lady who went into the post office got a blast of smoke. Between puffs he would spit on the sidewalk. He was not too big to spank, that boy wasn't, and his mother ought to spank him good and hard.

I speak of the walk in front of the post office by way of illustration only. It applies to other parts of the town as well. Men will stand with their backs against a building and spit on the walk when they might just as well walk to the edge and unload their mouths into the street. I do hope there will be some reformation. If there is not the council should pass such an ordinance as many other cities have and then Mr. Tausky, our city marshal, who has proven himself so efficient in all other affairs looking to the good of the city, would see that it was enforced.—Clinton Chronicle.

We wonder if the above article would not apply very aptly to Beaver? It occurs to us that more than once this disagreeable nuisance has been quite evident on our walks.

The Bull in a China Shop Politics Can't Last Many Years In Oklahoma.

The Watonga Republican takes note of the change in the presidency of the schools of the state and reads the destroyers of our magnificent educational system the following well-merited scorching:

"Last week the board for normal school's deposed T. W. Conway, president of the Northwestern Normal at Alva, and J. R. Campbell, president of the Southwestern Normal at Weatherford. Walter Ross of Edmond became president of the Northwestern, and J. F. Sharp of Geary becomes president of the Southwestern. There was no reason why the changes should have been made at this time. Both schools are in splendid condition and are enjoying an unprecedented era of prosperity. Why were the president of these schools changed in the middle of the year? Politics! Only that and nothing more. If the powers that be intended to make these changes for political purposes they should have waited until the end of the year and then played their politics decently and in order. But their action has been very, very 'raw.' Their extreme partisanship cannot, it appears, be kept out of the schools. Among the educational institutions of Oklahoma they have evidently commenced the traditional parade of the 'bull in china shop.' Oklahoma's schools have been her pride. They stand as monuments to the enterprise and progressive spirit of a people who have achieved great things. Are these temples of beauty to be despoiled? Must they be shorn of their magnificence by the ruthless hand of these political Goths and Vandals, who apparently unused to such structures of grandeur, seem disposed to destroy them, or at least degrade them to the level of partisan politics of the basest order?"

Even the schools, which are best managed when made unpartisan, are jumped upon by the political ghouls, and robbed of much of their power for good, in the midst of a school term. And what for? Politics! Political swag! Could a political party be guilty of a more reprehensible act than this? The thought of fairness and decency to the students should have suggested that they await the change until the end of the unexpired term. There were no charges. There were no grounds for removal. Save and alone the fact that the learned gentlemen are not democrats. They are Republicans and that in itself was enough to damn them in the estimation of the powers that be.—State Capital.
