WILSON DIDN'T KEEP HIS WORD
In discussing President Wilson's appeal for party support in the congressional elections of 1918, Mr. Tumulty devotes unnecessary space to justifying the President as quite within his rights.

We were not aware that the propriety of such appeals on ordinary occasions has ever been questioned. All Presidents work for the success of their party at all elections, and the more openly they do it the better for everybody. Quite contrary to the intent or expectation of those who framed the Constitution, all our Presidents lead a dual political life. As national leaders they represent the whole people in international affairs. As party leaders they lead their party in domestic affairs.

Whether a President does well to openly and officially make international questions party questions, the American people must decide. Apparently they resented it in the case of President Wilson, for in spite of his appeal they returned a Congress diametrically opposed to him.

In his appeal for a Democratic Congress as evidence of the people's approval of his foreign policy, and confidence in him as their "unembarrassed spokesman at home and abroad," the President used the following language:

"I am your servant and will accept your judgment without cavil."

The most serious popular objection to President Wilson was that he did not keep that promise. On the contrary, instead of following unbroken precedent, and sending a 56-partisan delegation to Paris, he ignored the vote which he had promised to respect, went personally to Paris, and when there insisted on endeavoring to pledge the American people to policies which a subsequent election showed that they abhorred. When President Wilson broke the promise above quoted he committed political suicide.—San Francisco Chronicle.

GREAT DIFFERENCE BETWEEN "RESPECT" AND "PROTECT"

Naturally enough there will be a very full and free discussion of the four-power agreement, or any multiple-power agreement which can be reached at the disarmament conference. Some of the arguments will be based on a clear and painstaking analysis of the proposals some will be founded upon assumptions and suspicions, some will be intensely partisan both for and against. The average man will probably aim to keep a cool head and base his judgment on facts and reason.

There have already been some disputes apparently started over what is meant by "respect" when the parties to the proposed agreement announce that they will respect the rights of other nations. Some persons, like Senator Reed, for instance, interpret "respect" to mean "protect". To the average mind this stretching of the word, or rather changing of its meaning may seem a considerable flight of the imagination, but then others besides Senator Reed may be capable of such imaginative excursion into the realm of fancy.

Now what do the words "respect the rights" of other nations, commit the United States to? Nothing but what it has always done in the past and should always do in the future. This pledge then binds us to nothing new. But how about the other nations? To a four-power, or any multiple power agreement which may be reached in the future? Has Great Britain the great world colonizer in the past always respected the rights of others? Has Japan, in China, in Korea in Siberia, in Manchuria, always respected the rights of other persons? Has France in Morocco and the South Seas always respected the rights of others?

The United States is doing but what it has always done and is receiving a pledge from other nations that in the future they will do a similar thing.

But does "respect" mean "protect"?

When an individual respects a man's rights to a certain piece of property does it not mean he will join this other man in a suit in court to respect that acknowledged right against some third party that does not respect that right? Or to take gun in hand and stand beside that neighbor in maintaining his respected rights?

Did not Mr. Wilson when another agreement was before the people announce that in effect it would mean nothing unless there was a special pledge of protection in the nature of Article X of the League covenant, which specific pledge is set forth absent from the proposed agreement as published? The lack of such a specific pledge did not commit us to achieve protection then why should such a promise pledge us to protect? We merely say that we "respect" that is, will not interfere in the affairs of other nations.

INCOME TAX FACTS

In making out his income tax returns for 1921, the average taxpayer will find a considerable saving in comparison with the amount of tax paid on the same income for 1920.

The exemptions provided by the revenue act of 1921 are $1,000 for single persons, the term including widows, widowers and divorcees, and persons separated from husband and wife by mutual agreement; $2,500 for married persons whose net income was $5,000 or less and $2,000 for married persons whose net income was $5,000 or more. Under the revenue act of 1918 the personal exemption allowed a married person was $2,000 regardless of the amount of net income. The personal exemption allowed a married person applies also to the head of a family, man or woman, who supports in one household, one or more relatives by blood, marriage or adoption.

The exemptions for dependents—a person who receives his chief support from the taxpayer and who is under 18 years of age or incapable of self support because mentally or physically defective—is increased from $200 to $400.

The act requires that a return be filed by every single person whose net income for 1921 was $1,000 or more, every married person whose net income was $2,000 or more, and by every person, single or married whose gross income was $5,000 or more.

The requirement to file a return of gross income of $5,000 or more regardless of net income is a new provision. Net income is gross income, less certain specified deductions for business expenses, losses, bad debts, etc., which are fully explained on the forms.

Returns must be filed by married couples whose combined net income for 1921, including that of dependent minor children, equaled or exceeded $2,000 or if the combined gross income equaled or exceeded $5,000.

The period for filing returns is from January 1 to March 15, 1922. Heavy penalties are provided for failure to or "wilful refusal" to file a return on time.

Forms 1040A for incomes of $5,000 and less and 1040 for incomes in excess of $5,000 may be obtained from the offices of collectors of internal revenue and branch offices. The tax may be paid in full at the time of filing the return, or in four equal installments, due on or before March 15, June 15, September 15, and December 15.
