The Weather.

Washington, June 3.—Forecast: South Carolina—Generally fair Thursday and Friday.

Seneca seems to have caught the Atlanta distaste for detectives.

Anderson people should send large delegations to the Clemson commencement.

Weather bureau seems to be trying to win a pennant on accuracy in its forecasts.

Sylvia Pankhurst says that she would lie on the steps of the house of commons.

We commend the concluding paragraph of our correspondent from Fant's Grove.

It would be better if all vessels had nothing more than a sham rock to go up against.

Costumes for seaside resorts are giving more concern than "Is the water warm enough for you."

The White Way seems to be receiving glowing tribute from friends in all parts of the State.

The more battleships the less fighting, seems to be the policy of the democratic administration.

Seems to us that too many colleges have been robbing the cradle roll. Give the high school a chance.

Two weeks hence the people of South Carolina will have a line on the political situation in the state.

A lot of annoyance is being caused by this chap Carranza. Will the United States be made to do as he says all the time?

Every democrat should see that his name is on the club rolls. This is really not as much trouble as going to the polls to vote.

Time for summer excursions is indefinitely postponed until after the rain puts the grass where it can be fought with the hoe.

We are printing today the entire rules of the democratic party and recommend that all democrats read the whole thing through.

Before the campaign opens every candidate should make up his mind to treat his opponent fairly and to accept the result in good grace.

Rev. S. A. Nettles seems to be on top technically, but there are some preachers who seem to think the Advocate will suffer under his return.

The Southern railway would do a big thing by South Carolina by building the Blue Ridge road through at least as far as the apple orchards of North Georgia.

One of the militant suffragettes in England, after knocking a man down with a hammer exclaimed that the suffs had been too lady-like. She had just finished ruining a painting entitled "Love Wounded."

Rock Hill man in town yesterday viewed 19 store buildings in course of erection and grudgingly admitted that Anderson is almost as good as his town. His name is George, not Washington, but Cowan.

BRKAKING CONFIDENCE

One of the first rules taught by men breaking into honorable newspaper news, we also feel a pride in our professional reputation to such an extent that we would rather suffer a "beat" on an item than to publish it under circumstances that would appear base and would bear down on the very face of it.

While The Intelligencer feels a responsibility to give its readers the news, we also feel a pride in our professional reputation to such an extent that we would rather suffer a "beat" on an item than to publish it under circumstances that would appear base and would bear down on the very face of it.

Tuesday The Intelligencer learned that the treasurer of Anderson county has tendered his resignation to the governor of the State. This paper was requested upon honor not to publish the information.

In some manner our curiosity was piqued and we wired the private secretary of the governor of the state to the following effect: "Did the governor's office today give out a story on the resignation of the treasurer of Anderson county?"

The Intelligencer, Anderson, S. C. Your wire. No newspaper story given out today on any matter today, as far as I know.

We know that the public is not interested in the shop talk and the other matters of newspaper offices, but this is a matter of deep significance to the newspapers trying to live up to a professional standard.

We would not have said these things but for the fact that some weeks ago the publication referred to made a false statement to the effect that The Intelligencer had obtained a certain bit of news from the county treasurer's office and had violated Mr. McGee's confidence.

We wish to say here and now that The Intelligencer will ever fight to earn and to deserve and to retain the confidence of the people. We would, therefore like to ask the question: Did the purported story from Columbia published yesterday afternoon come from outside the city limits of Anderson?

There is more in this than the mere matter of a "beat" or a "loss" of a story. It is a matter of principle. If this story did not originate in Columbia, why does it bear a Columbia date line?

Post Script Since the above was written, The Intelligencer has received the following from its Columbia correspondent, Mr. W. F. Caldwell, The Intelligencer, Anderson, S. C.

No resignation received here, so Mr. Aull announced, Governor Blease is in Charleston, 10:22 p. m. W. F. CALDWELL.

We believe that the case here is made quite plain. The Intelligencer does not wish to be very severe in this matter, but we wish for our readers to know that we try to be careful in the selection and printing of news and facts, although newspapers, like individuals, are prone to err and may be deceived by designing persons "riding" their columns.

THE OLD FIRE DEPARTMENT

We reproduce today from another paper an article written by that stouly lover of Anderson, Andrew C. Todd, upon the history of the fire department of this city. This article is especially interesting as the firemen of the city have had hard work this year and their friends wish to see them get a trip to the State convention at Florence.

What has become of the first horses of the Anderson fire department? That is a question which some might not stop to think of often, but we saw one yesterday, Old Charley. He had a bad sore on his side and the flies were bothering him a great deal. This one time splendid old animal has done his part for the protection of the city—but today he is but a shambling old wreck. Are there any human prototypes?

ANDERSON JURORS

Look at the roster of jurors to serve in the Anderson county court. That lot of men could be trusted with any case. This county has the highest average in the state with reference to character, intelligence and fear of the law on the part of the petit jurors. And that is one of the things that has helped to make Anderson a great county.

Laracy divorce deposition of wealthy young Howard Dale against his wife, Dorothy, gives detailed descriptions of Swedish punches.

An Oakland, Cal., man arrested for violating the auto laws, argued the excuse that he was in an argument with his mother-in-law, which distracted his attention.

Washington June 3.—Day in congress. Senate: Met at 11 a. m. Foreign relations committee adopted the Southernland resolution to refer the Panama toll, exemption dispute to arbitration.

Interstate commerce committee heard prominent railroad men on government control of security issues. Senator Owen prepared a corrupt practices act and a presidential primary bill to be introduced shortly.

Miscellaneous bills considered under the calendar Wednesday.

Representative Jones prepared new Philippine independence bill and went to the White House to confer with the president about it.

Representative Vinco made an unsuccessful attempt to set aside the calendar Wednesday rule and take up the anti trust bills.

Consideration of the Watkins bill to codify and revise the judiciary laws was taken up.

Representative Sharp, Ohio, introduced a resolution requesting the president to invite foreign governments to participate in the international congress on education at Oakland, Calif. August 16-27, 1915.

Representative Macdonald, Michigan, introduced a bill to create a national employment bureau and make every postoffice labor exchange.

Bills introduced by Representatives Johnson of Washington, and Britton of Illinois, to establish a home for lepers.

Adjourned at 5:10 p. m. to 11 a. m. Thursday.

COKER-TOMAS

Married, Sunday May 31, by Rev. H. C. Martin at his residence at Belton Mr. Walter Thomas and Miss Minnie Coker, both of Belton.

STRIKING USE OF FLOUNCING.

Machine embroidery flouncing in colors on a cotton crepe is beautifully developed in this afternoon frock for a fashionable summer toilet. The vogue for ribbon is indicated in the skirt and the sash, which is draped generously down the back.

THE BEAUTIES OF PISGAH FOREST DESCRIBED IN CHARMING MANNER

The Wonderful Land of the Sky Sold By Mrs. Vanderbilt to the Government To Be Kept Perpetually as a Playground for Nation

(Written For The Intelligencer by Donald Gillis.)

Asheville, N. C., June 3. The recent decision by the U. S. Forest Reservation Commission to purchase from Mr. George W. Vanderbilt 88,700 acres of land near Asheville, N. C., will soon make the United States the owner of a vast and beautiful forest in the heart of the Southern Appalachian mountains, only 16 hours ride from Washington and 13 from Atlanta. It is believed that by next year congress will convert it into a national park to serve as a playground for the thirty-five million people to whom the railways make it accessible in a day's journey. Its center is 17 miles in a southwest direction from Asheville from which its nearest point is only six miles distant.

Containing 134 square miles, it formed the bulk of the land which the late George W. Vanderbilt acquired in the past 23 years in connection with his princely Biltmore House, the finest country place in America. "Pisgah Forest," he called this cherished possession, and this name has been adopted by the commission. Conserved by the first scientific forestry practiced in America, it is the finest and most extensive hardwood forest in the Eastern states, and it will be the largest area owned by the United States East of the Mississippi.

Pisgah Forest is a princely domain of mighty mountains and crystal streams. Lacking the barren grandeur of the Rockies, it is a great green garden of wooded heights and grassy glades, impenetrable thickets of rhododendron and azalea making masses of bloom in spring and early summer. In its bounds are giant peaks, some grassy "balds," other balsam-clad domes, and rock capped summits with granite precipices sheltering bear and wolves, culminating in the sharp spire of Pisgah's pyramid 5757 feet above sea level.

Abundant rainfall ensures luxuriant vegetation. Noble trees of poplar, oak, spruce, hemlock, balsam, hickory, walnut, maple, birch, cover the slopes. A thousand high placed springs send their cold waters through ferny dells to form the hastening streams. Cascading over rocky bottoms they foam against great boulders, swirl in dark pools, spread like a silver curtain on rock tables and plunge, as at Looking Glass, sheer down for sixty feet. It is a land of singing brooks and white-crested streams.

Game and fish abound in the forest. It is estimated that there are 3,000 deer, besides bear, wolves, foxes, raccoons, opossums, squirrel, rabbits, quail, wild turkey, native pheasants and the descendants of the Chinese and English pheasants with which it was stocked years ago. The clear, cool water is the native habitat of the speckled or mountain trout and in the larger streams are the rainbow or California variety. Wardened religiously for many years the trout are as plentiful as the ardent fisherman could desire.

One may reach the heart of this wilderness in a two hour's ride from Asheville, and the greater part of it believed to be unequalled in America; a road nearly a mile in elevation and an automobile road at that. It was built by Mr. Vanderbilt exclusively for use by his automobile in reaching his hunting lodge on one of the "ears" of that "rat" which, as seen from Asheville, the imagination pictures as climbing to the sharp summit of Pisgah.

HOW NINETY SIX WAS THUS NAMED

History of Old District and Its Famous Indian Legend.

(Paper From Edgefield Chapter.) The origin of names of various towns and places is of interest to us, being always a matter of more or less curiosity and not less often quite a source of information. I feel that I can make no better introductory remarks in connection herewith than by relating the incident, very pathetic and touching, that gave rise to the name of the district of Ninety Six.

Ninety Six derived its name from a strikingly peculiar, though to a certain extent, quite a natural occurrence; and all will join in the opinion hearing the story, that the name is both appropriate and suggestive.

Many of the names of our States, towns, rivers, etc., are derived from the Indians, because they are almost invariably very pretty names and because they preserve aboriginal history and legend.

Ninety Six, however, is of course of our own English language. The name arose from the legend of the beautiful devotion of an Indian maiden to her white lover, an early settler, of that section, whose life was in the hands of her who loved him best.

The home of this Indian maiden was some distance from that of her lover, it being near the subsequent location of Fort Prince George, and was known as Keowee, an Indian village of the Cherokee tribe, but it was also in this same district. Chiquole—a name that was her name—having learned of a contemplated attack upon the small band of whites by the Indians, rode with the speed which only love could have made possible. Just in advance of the attacking Indians, covering the distance between Keowee and the home of her lover—96 miles—in 24 hours. The whites, rejoicing in Chiquole's bravery which saved them from destruction, named their settlement Ninety-Six—the distance of the memorable ride. Eighteen and Twenty-Three mile creeks of the same section derive their names from this legend also.
