THE PROBLEM OF HAPPINESS.
Do you remember that advertisement in which the baby is reaching for a bar of soap which floats in the water and the legend:

"He will not be happy until he gets it?"

There is a true touch of human nature in the picture. Baby, youth, man, woman—we all reach for something that we fancy will make us happy.

However—
One might draw a companion picture, a picture of the baby when he has got the bar of soap and write under it the words, "He's got it, but is not happy."

Which would be another true picture of the nature that is in us all. We get what we want, but are not made happy thereby.

"If my business were established I would be a happy man," says one.

"If I owned a good home I should be perfectly content and happy."

"If I had a big farm like So and So," sighs the small owner.

"If I had a million dollars," wails the prosperous business man.

And so on.

Whereas, none of these would be happy over the possession of the things they so ardently wish for. Why?

Because, in the first place, there is more enjoyment in getting things than in having them. The baby got his joy in getting the soap, not in possession of it.

Besides—

Whatever you wish for and get there is always something the matter with it when you get it—some fly in the ointment of enjoyment. And there is always something more that you want to get.

You see, the problem of personal happiness cannot be worked out by arithmetic. When you merely add to what you have something more of the same kind, you are not getting any more happiness—very slowly—learn to be content with what you have.

And you will find that a thousand dollars ten times as much as you have, will not make you blessed.

Happiness is not in what you have, but in what you are.

Happiness is inside you.

THE QUALITY OF MERCY.

Do you remember in Victor Hugo's story of "Les Miserables" how for years Inspector Javert pursued Jean Valjean, who had stolen a loaf of bread for a starving sister?

Well, here is a modern instance.

Javert put Jean Valjean into the gaol and pursued him because of his stern sense of official duty, but the persecutor in this modern story had no such excuse.

William F. Delmege, a New York butcher, is the Javert of the tale, and Jacob P. Heintz is the poor delinquent whom Delmege hounded.

The story runs thus:

Years ago Heintz pleaded guilty to stealing some meat from his employer. Since that time he has not only lived an honest life, but has worked hard to support his own family and also four children of a dead brother.

Whenever Heintz went Delmege followed, sooner or later told about the theft and secured the discharge of the unfortunate man.

Discouraged by his struggle against these odds, Heintz had Delmege arrested for breach of the peace. The latter admitted to the judge he had secured the discharge of Heintz three times.

"He said he thought it was 'his duty' to do so,"

you know this man was leading the 'honest life' asked the magistrate.

Delmege said:

Whereupon the court grew indignant. "Is there then no such thing as penance or mercy? Must the door of opportunity be everywhere slammed in the face of a poor man's face? I will put you under bonds of $1,000 to keep the peace as to this matter."

In default of bail Delmege went to jail.

Oh, just judge!

Heintz, like Jean Valjean, was redeeming his life. And every time he tried to get his head above water Delmege pushed him under.

"The quality of mercy is not strained."

The pitiless Javert of Hugo's story, torn in his desire between the call of duty and the call of mercy, had the grace to drown himself.

This modern Javert, with no sworn oath to support, showed no bowels of mercy and deserved none.

Sure Proofs.

Mabel—I am sure he must have loved her very dearly.

Maudie—I should say so. He married her in spite of the fact that he had been out in the rain with her all one afternoon, was seasick with her and saw her unexpectedly at home the morning after a dance.—London Opinion.

Clothes For Little Money

In the 33 years that I have done business in this city I have never carried in my stock poor clothes, because no matter how cheap they are sold, they are always unsatisfactory and never make friends.

Early last Spring I made a clean up of Spring and Summer accumulations and take this opportunity to make the anniversary sale a great attraction to the men and families who must economize and who must limit themselves to very small outlays for their clothing supplies for themselves and boys, by now cutting down to ridiculous prices the fall and winter clothing accumulations here.

This calls attention to men's suits that the anniversary sale will offer below $5.00 and down to $1.99. They are the L. Rothschild quality. All of good all-wool materials. Some of these are stock worn and if so your attention will be called to the imperfections, but they are the greatest values for work clothes that have ever been offered because they are good and the price is small. Men's all wool suits up from
