Among the grandest of these are the row of columns in the entrance porch, the capitals of which, of curious animals twined around with vines, were brought from the ruins of the temple of Jerusalem by the earliest Venetian crusaders.

In the center of this porch three slobs of red marble set in the pavement mark the site of a great historical event, where fierce Emperor Frederick Barbarossa healed his long warfare with Pope Alexander (being received on the outside of the church, because he was not worthy, until humbled, and reconciled, to bones of St. Mark, stolen from their place of septilture in Alexandria by ingenious Venetions who packed them is kegs of lard and so brought them triumphantly under the very noses of the Mussulman watchmen who would not touch or even look apon the detested substance.

THE FAMOUS BRONZES.

But a more precious treasure in the eyes of all Venetians than colthe four famous bronze horses which stand over the portal and which claim a more eventful history than any other works of art in existence The work of Greek Lysippus, they were taken by the Romans from their homes to stand over the arch of Nero, in Rome, then re-moved to that of Trajan, taken to Byzantine by Constantine, when he transferred the seat and the treasures of the empire thither; and, when that city fell before the Cru saders, brought as the proudest trophy of victory by blind Doge Dandolo, to Venice, where, for hundreds of years, they were cherished with devoutest pride as the palladium of that city's greatness. When the besieging Genoese had reduced her to the last extremity, Genoese had and in their despair, the Venetians sent to the Genoese Admiral Doria a blank sheet of paper and told him to write his terms of peace thereon and they would submit, and the haughty Admiral, flushed with triumph, replied that he would

The News and Berald Venetians arose so fiercely at these terms that they made one supreme effort and utterly routed their vaun ting foemen. And when Napoleon subjugated the once haughty, but then effete republic, he proudly carried the horses to his beloved Paris and placed them over the triumphal arch in the Place Carrousel; the Venetians bewailing their loss far more than they did that of their liberties. And when proud Paris fell in her turn, one of the first acts of the Allies, most bitterly resented by the Parisians, was to send the much traveled steeds back to Venice again, and they now triumphantly stand where they have stood for six hundred and seventyfive years.

of helpless captives without sympathatic interest. No wonder that the conquering French Republican army of '97, when they burst into these gloomy, horrid dungeons, and carge out, marveling and enraged at their cruelty, proceeded to descree that Venice should exist as a State no more forever, smashed up her proud Bucentaur with which shused to wed the Adriatic and lugged off her precious bronze horses to Paris! She was not worthy of better treatignt!

The CATHEDRA!.

It was refreshing to go hence to the glorious old cathedral which has stood, close at hand, for 9000 years, in its peculiar Romanesque Byzantine style, the scene of so many grand triumphs when they returned.
