THE CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN

What Mr. Nicholls is Doing in Congress—No Paid Campaign Manager. No Political Combines. No County Feud Influence.

(Political Advertisement) Laurensville Herald, Friday, August 4, 1916.

While the crowds attending the congressional campaign in Laurens county have not been very large, much interest has been manifested, and probably never before has there been such a quiet demeanor among the people, yet it has been plainly evident that the influential and thinking classes have never been more determined to reward a man for faithful services and remaining at his post of duty during one of the most critical periods in the history of the national government. This Sam Nicholls has done, and it is such an unusual occurrence—all the other congressmen that this District has ever had coming post-haste back to the State with the first sound of the "toxin of war" to look after their political fences.

From time to time we have heard much of what a Congressional representative ought to do—"stay in Washington and attend to the business for which he was elected," etc. Nicholls is doing this very thing, and he is doing it with the utmost confidence that the masses of the people of all classes will approve his action.

And what is equally meritorious in Sam Nicholls's case is the fact that he maintains no paid or other campaign manager, trusting solely and absolutely to the fairness of the sovereigns of his District to distinguish between the mode of his campaign and that of his competitors. There is no campaign funds of any clique, party faction or corporation behind Nicholls—no political combines, county feuds or the prestige and influence of big bond-holders to "back him up."

But notwithstanding the lack of all of these, Nicholls seems to have got the "coon skin and gone," since every measure which certain critic candidates are advocating, have already been passed and Nicholls voted for them.

Hence, in a simple, straightforward way, Nicholls is confidently trusting to the fairness and conservatism of all classes of citizens to inquire into his stewardship before giving their verdict against them, believing that a careful investigation will reveal the fact that Sam Nicholls, at least, is not one of those who, when weighed in the Democratic political balance, will be found wanting.
