KINDNESS.

As stars upon the tranquil sea,
In mimic glory shine,
So words of kindness in the heart,
Reflect the source divine.
O, be kind, whoever thou art,
That breathe'st mortal breath;
And it shall brighten all thy life,
And sweeten even death.

NIGHT'S RAY OF HOPE.

How beautiful the night! Here set me muse
A silent dweller by silent scene—
Here where the soul its earthly thought renews,
And smiles, forgetful of the woe that's been,
For there are times for every heart I ween
When the all glorious smile of hope appears
To light the future, and to fall serene
On the dull life that it sustains thro' wars,
Longing for lengthen'd rest and cold oblivion's years.

Not here shall come the weary wasting light
That others feel, and weep to feel so long!
Around, I read in every star of night
The hope, the love, that make the pilgrim strong
Here let the soul renew its joyous song,
And dream, though it may be in vain, how fair,
How pure, how sweet, will be the light along
The future, that some minds would paint with care
The nursings born in grief and sorrow's withering air!
Not here my soul, shall thou forget how high—
How high, at least, thy aim should be in life!
Though but a dream, let it be ever nigh,
To nerve the arm and whet the trusty knife!
Stern resolution be with me through strife!
When right is on our side we're true as steel,
No music need we—neither drum nor file
To march thro' tracks that evermore reveal
How little man can know, how less his wish to feel.

GUILTY, BUT DRUNK!

Dan Marble's Story of the Georgia Judge.
Not a few of our readers, West and South, who had the pleasure of an intimate acquaintance with Dan Marble, will recognize the irresistible story he used to "tell" of the stolen spoons and the Georgia Judge. Col. B. Adair, we believe, once dressed up the joke and set it a going, and partially in that guise we give it a place in the annals of the comedian:

"Many years ago, while the State of Georgia was yet in its infancy, an eccentric creature named Brown, was one of the Circuit Judges. He was a man of considerable ability, of inflexible integrity, and much beloved and respected by all the legal profession, but he had one fault. His social qualities would lead him, despite his judgment, into frequent excesses. In travelling the Circuit it was his almost invariable habit the night before opening the Court to get "comfortably corned," by means of appliances common upon such occasions. If he couldn't succeed while operating upon his own hook, the gentlemen of the law would generally turn and help him.

"It was in the spring of the year, taking his wife—a model of a woman in her way—in the old-fashioned, but strong 'carry-all,' he journeyed some forty miles, and reached the village where the 'court' was to be opened next day. It was along in the evening of Sunday that he arrived at the place, and took up his quarters with a relation of his 'better-half,' by whom the presence of the official dignitary was considered a singular honor. After supper Judge Brown strolled over to the only tavern in the town, where he found many old friends, called to the place, like himself, on important professional business, and who were proper glad to meet him.

"Gentlemen, said the Judge, 'tis quite a long time since we enjoyed a glass together—let us take a horn all around. Of course, Sterritt (addressing the landlord,) you have better liquor than you had the last time we were here—the stuff you had then was not fit to give a dog."

"Sterritt, who had charge of the house, pretended that everything was right, and so they went to work. It is unnecessary to enlarge upon a drinking bout in a country tavern—it will quite answer our purpose to state that somewhere in the region of midnight the Judge wended his very devious way towards his temporary home. About the time he was leaving, however, some young barristers, fond of a practical joke, and not much afraid of the bench, transferred all the silver spoons of Sterritt to the Judge's pocket.

"It was eight o'clock on Monday morning that the Judge rose. Having indulged in the process of ablation and absterstion, and part-ken of a cheerful and refreshing breakfast, he went to his room to prepare himself for the duties of the day.

"Well, Polly, said he to his wife, I feel much better than I expected to feel after that frolic of last night.

"Ah, Judge, said she, reproachfully, you are getting too old—you ought to leave off that business now.

"Ah, Polly, what's the use of talking? "It was at this precise instant of time that the Judge, having put on his overcoat, was proceeding, according to his usual custom, to give his wife a parting kiss, that he happened, in thrusting his hand into his pocket, to lay hold of Sterritt's spoons. He pulled them out. With an expression of horror almost indescribable, he exclaimed—

"My God! Polly!

"What on earth's the matter, Judge?"

"Just look at these spoons.

"Dear me, where'd you get them?"

"Get them? Don't you see the initials on them?—extending them towards her—I stole them!"

"Stole them, Judge?"

"Yes, stole them!"

"My dear husband, it can't be possible—from whom?"

"From Sterritt, over there—his name is on them.

"Good heavens! how could it happen?"

"I know very well, Polly—I was very drunk when I came home, wasn't I?"

"Why, Judge, you know your old habit when you get among those lawyers.

"But I was very drunk?"

"Yes, you was.

"Was I remarkably so when I got home, Mrs. Brown?"

"Yes, Judge, drunk as a fool, and forty times as stupid."

"I thought so, said the Judge, dropping into a chair in extreme despondency—I knew it would come to that at last. I have always thought that something would happen to me—that I should do something very wrong—kill somebody in a moment of passion, perhaps—but I never imagined that I should be mean enough to be guilty of deliberate larceny.

"But there may be some mistake, Judge!"

"No mistake, Polly. I knew very well how it came about. That fellow, Sterritt, keeps the meanest sort of liquor, and always did—liquor mean enough to make a man do any sort of a mean thing. I have always said it was mean enough to make a man steal, and now I have a practical illustration of the fact. And the old man burst into tears.

"Don't be a child, said his wife, wiping away the tears, go, like a man, over to Sterritt, tell him it was a little bit of a frolic—pass it off as a joke—go and open court, and nobody will ever think of it again.

"A little of the soothing system operated upon the Judge, as such things usually do, his extreme mortification was finally subdued, and over to Sterritt's he went, with a tolerable face. Of course he had but little difficulty in settling with him; for aside from the fact that the Judge's integrity was unquestionable, he had an inkling of the joke that had been played.

"Judge Brown proceeded to count, and took his seat; but spoons and had liquor—had liquor and spoons—liquor, spoons, drunk, larceny, and Judge Brown, was so mixed up in his worshipful bewildered head, that he felt awful pale, if he did not look so. In fact, the Judge felt cut down, and his usual self-possessed manner of disposing of business, his diction and decisions were not what Brown had been noted for.

"Several days had passed away, and the business of the court was drawing towards a close, when one morning, a rough looking sort of a customer, was arraigned on a charge of stealing. After the clerk had read the indictment to him, he put the usual question:

"Guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty, but drunk," answered the prisoner.

"What's that plea?" exclaimed the Judge, who was half dozing upon the bench.

"He pleads guilty, but says he was drunk, he lied the clerk.

"What's the charge against the man?"

"He is indicted for grand larceny.

"What's the case?"

"May it please your honor, said the prosecuting attorney, the man is regularly indicted for stealing a large sum from the Columbus Hotel.

"He is, eh? and he pleads—"

"He pleads guilty, but drunk."

"The Judge was now fully aroused.

"Guilty, but drunk! That is a most extraordinary plea. Young man, are you certain you were drunk?"

"Yes, sir.

"Where did you get your liquor?"

"At Sterritt's.

"Did you get none nowhere else?"

"You got drunk on his liquor, and afterwards stole his money?"

"Yes, sir.

"Mr. Prosecutor, said the Judge, do me the favor to enter a nolle prosequi in that man's case. The liquor of Sterritt's is mean enough to make a man do anything dirty. I got drunk on it the other day myself, and stole all Sterritt's spoons—release the prisoner. Mr. Sheriff, I adjourn the Court.—Falconbridge's Life.

the other printed with a most perfect register, and as they come from the press, the sheets are clipped apart by an ingenious contrivance. The speed of this press is almost unlimited, and its exactness is beyond anything in this line of machinery. Mr. F. estimates the cost of the largest sized printing press at not more than five hundred dollars.

Finding a Seat in Church.—We remember to have heard of an instance in which a whole congregation was disconcerted, and an eloquent discourse very near being spoiled, thus: A strange gentleman, respectable, but of rather a rough plebeian appearance, entered a pewed church during the performance of service. Passing up an aisle, and seeing no pews opened for his reception, nothing disturbed, or abashed, he retired, shouldered a block of wood, and while doors were flying open, placed his block in the centre of the aisle, seated himself thereon with imperturbable self-possession, and then facing the minister gave him marked, but very annoying attention, to the close of his discourse, as though there had not been another auditor there; and when service was over, like an honest man, deliberately took up his block again, and returned it to its proper place.

CONVICTED.—John M. Thurston, who killed his brother-in-law, has been found guilty of murder in the first degree, at Oswego. This is rather a singular case. It was proven by various witnesses, that the prisoner was a strong abolitionist, a very eccentric in his religious views; and had frequently expressed his belief, that "it was less a crime to shoot a man than to vote for a slaveholder or liquor seller." Unfortunately for himself he put his theory in practice; the plea of insanity had no effect on the minds of the jury, who had sworn to render a verdict in accordance with the evidence; and the result of his misguided principles is the gallows. The case of this miserable man should be a warning to the destructive fanatics throughout the country, who preach resistance to the laws of both God and man, and who would delight in ridding the earth of all persons who do not approve of their peculiar notions of society, morality, &c.—N. NEW CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.
We find the following statements in the Mobile Herald and Tribune, and if substantiated, the discovery will be invaluable. The quantity of the medicine to be given at a dose is not stated:

In the first number of the New Orleans Monthly Medical Register—which we noticed a few days ago we find an article by Professor Stone on the virtues of "Phosphate of Lime in Scrofula and other depraved states of the System," which is of some moment. It was suggested by an essay in the London Lancet on the "physiology and pathology of the oxalate and phosphate of lime, and their relation to the formation of cells."

"The conclusion of the author (says Professor Stone) are based upon careful chemical research and results from the use of the remedy. His researches show that in man, as well as in vegetables and inferior animals, phosphate of lime as well as albumen and fat is absolutely essential for the formation of cells, and he considers that many of the pathological states of the system depends upon a deficiency of this salt. The affections in which it is advised are ulcerations dependant upon a general dyscrasia, and not a mere local affection; infantile atrophy; in those suffering from rickets and consequent diarrhoea and tuberculous diseases, particularly of the lungs in the early stages."

Struck by this article Professor Stone tested, and he thus describes three cases in which its virtues were very obvious. The first was that of a slave, who was admitted to the Professor's Infirmary in July, with a disease of the nose, the whole system showing great progress in scrofulous decay. The usual remedies were unsuccessfully applied until August, when cod-liver oil was used, but the disorganization of the stomach was increased by it. The phosphate of lime was then applied—eight grains—three times a day. Its good effects were soon apparent. It and the oil were, therefore, administered together, and the patient soon was restored to health.

The second case was that of a young lady, aged 24. Her disease was one of "unmixed phthisis, which might have been expected to terminate in the course of a few months" fatally. The upper part of both her lungs were filled with tubercles, and in some places were beginning to soften. The case was evidently a bad one. The treatment of cod liver oil was at first used, but without marked improvement. The phosphate of lime was then administered with the oil, and the result, as in the case of the negro, was soon apparent. The patient was rapidly getting well.

The third case was that of a child, seven years of age, in which the phosphate of lime was used with complete success.

We can only refer briefly to these cases for the purpose of directing attention to the subject. Before the dreadful diseases which they describe scientific men have stood abashed. That there is some remedy for them we can hardly doubt; and this may, if a new thing, be the desideratum which science is in search of.
