"No, ma'am," said the youngster decidedly. "I want to grow up so that everybody will look round at me."

Diggers of Anthracite.

In an article in World's Work on the situation in the anthracite coal regions Guy W. McConell explains that during recent years the old type of coal miner from Great Britain and Germany has disappeared out of the mines and that, "driven into their places by the extreme and peculiar hardships of laboring down under the crust of the earth, have come hordes upon hordes of racial types more physically fit to fight off the rheumatism lurking in the 'log hole' of a wet chamber and less susceptible to the prevalent miner's asthma and germs of tuberculosis. These are the peasantry of southeastern Europe, Russia and Poland. They are the rank and file of the anthracite field where general conditions have grown steadily worse," said President White of the United Mine Workers of America the other day. "Owing to the increase of 17 per cent in the cost of living during the last few years, many of our men are in debt to the land lord and installment houses, their children, in order to keep alive and stay in school, subsisting on oatmeal three times a day. Families are frequently forced to live three and four in our house."

JOHN'S SPEECH

By HERBERT DROGER

ANYTHING between the ridiculous and the sublime probably would have left John Moran with a very uncertain appreciation of the Fourth of July celebration. Neither the one nor the other, in his opinion, could have been very fruitful of results.

Of the two extremes, the sublime had been deliberately planned, it was premeditated. The ridiculous wasn't.

The former was the result of a clever scheme and weeks of hard work. The latter was the chance of a minute, unforeseen, unexpected, and, some might have said on the spot, unpropitious.

For several years John Moran had wooed Susan Duvau, but so far he seemed to himself no nearer the matrimonial goal than he had been at the beginning. All her people had been assisting him without apparent avail.

He had pleaded with her; he had coaxed and caajoled and even essayed to coerce after a mild fashion, his threats reaching that superlative proportion where he promised to identify himself for life with the sublime or order of bachelorhood.

But to all this she merely cast down her eyes demurely and asked him to wait awhile.

A score and one-half years had come and gone around the life of Susan. As her 31st birthday approached John, who had schemed until his hair was beginning to fall out, decided on a bold stroke.

That night he sat with her on the front porch, after the family had retired. Over them a dim light shined from the parlor window cast a pale glow. John sat quietly waiting, for the silence he depended on for the furtherance of his plan.

After awhile it came, and then, when the stillness had locked the light in its embrace, he began to hum, "Silver Threads Among the Gold." When he had ceased, tears stood in his eyes.

He drew his chair closer to hers, reached out for her hand again and asked her to become his wife. But it was the same old prosaic answer.

"Wait awhile, John," she insisted.

"Wait awhile. Do something grand. Show me that you can rise to the occasion."

Rise to the occasion, he would. He resolved that firmly as he stood up forthwith and bade her goodnight. He resolved it all the way home. The next morning he still resolved it. But how?

A happy thought struck him. John had a penchant for happy thoughts. He would make a speech at a Fourth of July celebration. It would be so grand and so eloquent, couched in such rich expressions and so laden with noble sentiment that she could not help but feel the appeal. He would show her that he could "rise to the occasion."

John got out his old school dictionary and brushed the dust from its covers. Then he borrowed an immense volume of masterpiece orations from a friend and read every speech he could find that contained any patriotic reference or expression.

For four weeks he labored almost incessantly, night and day, on his effusion, and finally he had it completed.

An obstacle that John had not reckoned on now loomed up. John was a member of the program committee, and he doubted the propriety of having himself included among the list of speakers.

The morning before the celebration he called around to see the chairman of the committee.

"You see—ahem—Mr. Grubbs," John began, "being one of the committee, I should regret to see any part of the program fall flat."

"Just so," answered the chairman. "I feel the same way."

"Well, as a matter of precaution, Mr. Grubbs, I think I shall prepare a few remarks myself today. Should any of the speakers be tardy, or fail to respond, you might call on me."

"Fine idea, John. I'll do it."

Then John took himself around to the residence of Squire Sloan. He knocked at the door and was admitted.

"Ahem, Squire," began John, after an inquiry concerning his host's health, "we are altering the program for tomorrow slightly."

"So?"

"Yes. You see, on account of your advanced years and the fact that you have been ailing, we thought it might suit you better to speak, say, at 11:30 than at 11 o'clock."

"I believe it would," answered the old man.

About 11 o'clock the next morning Chairman Grubbs scanned the gathering in vain for a glimpse of Squire Sloan. Then he stood up and announced:

"Though not appearing on the program, the Hon. John Moran has been requested to make a few remarks. It is not necessary that I introduce our esteemed fellow-citizen."

As John approached the edge of the platform he looked down into the face of Susan and made a mental note of the surprise expressed in her countenance. He paused a moment, as if improvising a speech, while he chuckled inwardly at the satisfaction the occasion afforded.

And rise to the occasion he undoubtedly did. He was the most eloquent, the most logical and the most impressive speech delivered that day. As he concluded he was greeted by a loud and prolonged applause.

He stepped down from the platform and made his way toward Susan. As he approached, he observed a twinkle in her eyes, but did not trouble himself with an explanation just then. He was too happy.

She arose and took hold of his arm. "Let us go off to some place where we can sit alone," she said.

They made their way toward the outskirts of the crowd. When they had reached a point where they could speak without being overheard, he turned to her questioningly.

"Well," he said, "Did I—"

"You certainly did, John," she interrupted. "Who would have thought it?"

The sublime had been attained.

"Who wrote it for you, John?" she asked.

"Wrote it?" in hurt surprise. "Why nobody."

They walked along in silence.

"How long did it take you to prepare it, John?"

He did not answer.

"Yes, you certainly did rise to the occasion, John. Now, you want to be careful not to fall, lest—"

Fate would have it that he fell that instant. Twisted and stung by her railleury, he had been walking perilously near the edge of the high dirt bank that overhung the creek without thought of danger.

As she spoke, the ground beneath his feet gave way, and he went tumbling through the dirt and sand into eight feet of water below.

Susan shrieked, and the crowd, alarmed by her cry, began to rush to the spot. As the gathering in front of the speakers' stand broke away in large groups, the chairman arose and asked the cause of the commotion. He was answered by a little urchin, who stood up in the seat of a farm wagon.

"Why, Jack Moran's fell in the creek," shouted the lad.

John was dragged out at the ford, a short distance down the creek. About

"I wonder," he reflected, "whether it was my celebration speech or the tumble I got?"

Men That Made History.

The proposal that there be erected at Washington a memorial to the signers of the Declaration of Independence makes especially interesting some little-known facts concerning that particular body of men.

There were 56 signers, and among them were lawyers, merchants, physicians, farmers, soldiers, a shoemaker, a sailor, a minister, a printer and a surveyor, and two signers whose occupation was set down at the time as "statesmen." The statesmen were Thomas Nelson, Jr., of Virginia and William Williams of Connecticut.

The shoemaker was Roger Sherman of Connecticut, the printer was Benjamin Franklin of Pennsylvania, the surveyor was John Morton of Pennsylvania, the sailor was William Whipple of Connecticut, and the minister was John Witherspoon of New Jersey, a statue of whom stands on Connecticut avenue in Washington.

The Liberty Bell was cast in London in 1752 by order of the Pennsylvania assembly for use in their statehouse. It was recast in 1753 on account of the first crack; the present crack dates from about 1779.

LAST OF A FABULOUS BEACH

Development of Metropolitan Life Insurance Company Island Resorts.

With the tearing down of the Oriental hotel, now ordered, Manhattan beach will lose the last token of its character as known to New York of a generation ago. In the mid '30s the beach was at its height of fame and prosperity, the New York World says. The Manhattan Beach hotel was thronged with well-to-do people who enjoyed good dinners, Gilmore's band and spectacular fireworks along with their ocean. To the right Brighton beach and its big hotel ministered to a popularity less expensive. Off to the left the Oriental presented itself as a monument of exclusiveness. Its guests, however, did not hesitate to avail themselves at will of the amusement chains terminating with Coney Island or West End.

Demands for a new seaside district led to the removal of the Manhattan beach hotel. Extension of that demand brings on the doom of the Oriental. This reveals an interesting development of life in the metropolitan district. Not less interesting and in some ways more important is the fact that the old order has passed, leaving no exact substitute. Coney Island still exists at an extreme of popularity. For the people of different inclinations who once crowded the Manhattan there is no place immediately at hand.

Few cities so rich in beaches as is New York would be content with so poor an employment of them, in point of the greatest good to the greatest possible number.

Good Markets—High Prices

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sheep stake on Alfalfa.

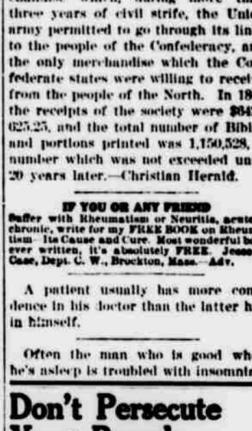

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle feed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscriptions.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and ask for reduced railway rates, information as to best locations, etc. Address Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or
