Irrigation in Northern Africa.

Northern Africa is a country which is not at all unknown to the traveler; it is a land of remarkable interest. There is found there some of the most ancient history of the world. In the valley of the Nile civilization sprang forth and reached a mark which in some features has hardly been surpassed. Yet a man has just returned to the United States who is probably the first to thoroughly explore that country along certain lines. He is the Botanical Explorer of the Agricultural Department, Mr. W. T. Swingle. For eighteen months Mr. Swingle has been traveling about the Mediterranean countries looking for plants and trees and for the products of the agriculturist and the horticulturist which might be of value to the farmers and fruit growers of the United States.

"Especially interesting," said Mr. Swingle, in talking of his work, "did I find the North African countries. They greatly resemble our own Southwest, and like a great portion of it, they are arid. Carrying the parallel still farther, they were, like it, once fertile through irrigation. This great area was once part of the Roman Empire, and the Romans seem to have known how to irrigate to perfection. For there is evidence that all of North Africa was as fertile as is the present valley of the Nile. The waters of the rivers seem to have been stored for irrigation in series of reservoirs, one above the other. The ruins of Algeria indicate a wealthy and populous community. But long since the land has reverted to its natural aridity; dams have disappeared, and irrigation has ceased; yet the ruins of great cities rise from out of the hot, sandy wastes, well preserved monuments, in the dry atmosphere, to the former grandeur of the Romans. Many of the buildings in these cities are almost entire, showing clearly the style of architecture, the triumphal arches, and other types of Roman work, and until one gets into their midst, it seems hardly possible that they have stood uninhabited for long centuries. Where now the burning sand of the desert is swept about by the hot winds, covering and uncovering carved steps and pillars, the green verdure, the swaying palms and the luxuriant growth of the tropics once held away under the magic influence of water, artificially distributed. The French Government is now making some interesting excavations in Algeria, but otherwise no description of the wonderful ruins is allowed.

Filbert Culture in Italy.
It will surprise many to hear that in certain districts of Italy the filbert crop rivals the produce of the vine in commercial importance. These delicious nuts are grown on bushes or shrubs, which are arranged in groups that are from 15 to 25 feet apart, so as to insure the access of plenty of light and air. They thrive best in a deep, clayey soil, and the planting takes place during November and December of slips from the mother plant. Seeds could be used, but the growth would be too slow to be profitable. As it is, the shrubs do not bear fruit until the third year, and blossoms appearing before that time being removed, so that the plant shall not be impoverished. The plants are periodically pruned, when any slips which have failed to sprout are removed and replaced by others; so that there are plantations which remain in full growth, although nearly a hundred years old. The filbert is not subject to the diseases common to other crops, but it suffers severely from hailstones and from cold winds.—Chicago Times-Herald.

New Fad in Sealing Letters.
My lady has a new fad about her papeterie which this time has nothing to do with the size or shape of the envelope or the tint of the paper. When she seals her letters now the up-to-date girl no longer puts the seal in the apex of the triangle made by the flap of the envelope, but carefully sets it about two inches to the left as the envelope lies addressed side down on her writing table. Just what the reason for this is or what the origin of it is none of the fair ones who are following the fad seems to be exactly sure. "It's no novel, though," one of them explained, "and the seal really looks much more artistic off to one side than planted right in the center."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Philippine Wedding Gowns.
When a Philippine lady of better class gets married she sometimes wears as her wedding dress a costume of native manufacture that reaches in value up into four figures. It takes months to make a handkerchief or a sleeve, so microscope and delicate is the fabric.

The Excuse.
Miss Fetherlopp (to sportsman who is exhibiting his day's shooting)—Oh, how could you kill these dear, pretty birds? I think it is positively cruel.
Sportsman—I suppose you know there is a great demand for these for hat ornamentation?
Miss Fetherlopp—Oh, of course, if it is a case of necessity, it is perfectly excusable.—Boston Transcript.

Your Good Health

depends upon the food you eat. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder adds to the healthfulness of all risen flour-foods.

Not only this, it makes the food lighter, sweeter, finer-flavored, more delicious.

It is worth while to exercise care in purchasing baking powder to see that you get the kind that makes the food more wholesome and at the same time more palatable.

NOTE.—There are many mixtures, made in imitation of baking powder, which it is prudent to avoid. They are lower in price than cream of tartar powders, but they are made from alum and render the food unhealthful.
