HORRIBLE HOMICIDE.

T. J. Riley Beaten and Kicked to Death by J. O. McIntosh.

Another of those deplorable tragedies for which Clifton is becoming notorious, occurred at the Richlieu saloon. Monday night, which terminated in the death of T. J. Riley, a traveling photographer, who had been residing in Northern Clifton for the past two months.

From the best information obtainable it seems that Riley was drinking heavily, and while in the Richlieu made some remark to Mrs. McIntosh—who runs a crap game in the house—to which her husband took exceptions. Words followed, when McIntosh knocked Riley down, then jumped on him with both feet and also kicked him in the stomach. Parties present caught McIntosh and forced him to desist, when a scuffle ensued, and it is said that more trouble of a serious nature was prevented by the timely interference of the proprietor of the house. Riley was found to be unconscious, and was taken to the hospital, where he died Wednesday afternoon.

At the time it was not thought that the injuries would prove fatal. Thursday morning however, Constable Hamilton swore out a warrant for the arrest of McIntosh, who had gone to Morinci, to look after some games in which he is interested. The constable followed him to Morinci, but found that he had voluntarily surrendered to Deputy Sheriffs Hobbs and Keppler, who brought him to Clifton Wednesday morning.

McIntosh waived his preliminary examination, and was remanded to jail without bail.

James Ramsey an old timer of this place, was a welcome visitor to his many friends. He came from his home in Richfield, Utah, to see his father who lives in Snowflake and who was reported to be quite sick, but finding the old gentleman convalescent he came over to shake hands with his numerous friends. He will return at once to his immense business interests at his home town.
