Mr. Maldonado is also a young, thorough business man and he will become quite an acquisition to the commercial circles of the place.

Mr. Wm. Clarke completed the last cropping of his alfalfa field on Friday of last week—December 9th. This may sound somewhat unreasonable to eastern south-bound people, but hay-making in northern Arizona continues nearly the whole year round and "December's as pleasant as May" in this land of bright sunshine. Even the figs are now ripening on his premises in town, the frosts having apparently not damaged them in the least, and his third crop of this delicious fruit is about ready to gather. Other gardens are still producing young and tender vegetables and but for the falling leaves of the cottonwoods and umbrella trees one would imagine that the joyful spring time had just got down to business.

Quite a serious accident occurred at the Mammoth mine last Monday. Henry Oatsman, a miner who had just commenced working and had completed his second shift, was coming up in the cage and when near the top of the shaft he leaned back to look up when his head was caught by the bars and he was badly injured. His breast bone and collar bone were broken but the whole extent of his injuries was not learned when the parties bringing the news left the camp. W. O. O'NEIL, Attorney-at-Law, Prescott, Arizona.

It is currently reported that operations are to be resumed on two of the most valuable silver mines in Globe District, which formerly were our largest producers, and yet considered, by miners competent to judge, the most promising silver mines in this section. Their development, together with the operation of the Old Globe copper mine, would make this the most prosperous camp in the Territory.—Silver Belt.

Having received a new, large safe, the estate of J. D. Rittenhouse will sell the one previously in use at a low price. It is one of the Hall's Safes and Lock Company's make and is in good condition.

Sufferers with pulmonary complaints, and, in fact, invalids with any disease, will find in Florence all the natural conditions for restoration to perfect health. The dry and warm atmosphere soothes their ailments, and the ability to constantly exercise in the open air very speedily restores them to perfect health. This advantage over the damp and chilling seashore should commend itself to the earnest consideration of every health-seeker.

FOR HOMES. There is probably no better opportunity in the West for people of moderate means to acquire homes and a competence than in the Gila Valley. The price of land is now low, and much of it can be had at the established Government price. Improved land, with water rights, are held at prices ranging from $25 to $50 per acre, and highly improved tracts are worth much more. The rapid growth of every species of plant and tree upon the soil, and the beauty of the valley, and the fact that the beauty of the foliage and flower can be had in three or four years one can transform a barren tract of waste into a more easy and inviting home than could be created in a dozen years in the States.

FOR INVESTMENT. The assurance that the value of every species of real estate will increase in rapid ratio during the next few years suggests to the shrewd and sagacious speculator a brilliant opportunity of increasing his store of wealth without any risk of loss whatever. By securing ranch property, present rare opportunities for investment or speculation, the basis of their value being the permanent character of their yearly returns.

PRE-HISTORIC PEOPLE. There are evidences of extensive ruins of towns of considerable size and pretensions adjacent to Florence, and the meandering of their old canals and reservoirs may still be traced for miles upon either side of the Gila River. Some of their edifices were of grand proportions, the most remarkable being the old Casa Grande, whose magnificent ruins are all objects of curiosity to strangers who visit Florence. When Coronado led his famous expedition northward in 1540, these ruins were even then ruins, being four stories high with walls six feet in thickness. Other buildings surrounding them had entirely crumbled down to mere mounds of earth, showing conclusively the antiquity of the old castle and its probable original dimensions. At that time the Indians who were living in that vicinity had no tradition relating to the builders of the huge structure, nor of the people who formerly inhabited this valley. They were certainly a superior race, and not only were they skilled in the manufacture of hard and durable concrete of which they constructed their mauseleums and built their walls, but they were thorough agriculturists, and their old canals and reservoirs also show them to have been possessed of no mean degree of engineering skill. Who they were, how they flourished, and whither they departed, are questions that may never be answered, but their tombs are giving the savans a slight clue that may serve to identify them with some of the living tribes who have retrograded in the scale of civilization since those days of peace and plenty. Their cities and their lands, left to decay and ruin, eventually became objects of curiosity only to those who came after them, and finally succumbed to the obliterating influences of ages.

GENERAL INFORMATION. Good stage accommodations are furnished from Casa Grande, the railroad station, to Florence, a distance of twenty-five miles. When requested to do so, the stage will make a short detour past the interesting ruins of Casa Grande, the prehistoric castle, situated six miles west of Florence.

The town of Pinal, where the Silver King mine is located, is thirty miles from Florence, in a northerly direction. The famous mine is five miles beyond Pinal. Fogs are almost unknown in the Gila Valley. Perhaps once or twice a year a light fog comes up from the Gulf of California, but it seldom lasts more than a few hours.

There are no falling dews at night, and the most feeble invalid can sleep out doors during the summer season without the least detriment to his health. A railroad will certainly reach Florence before the close of the year 1888, when the valley will enjoy all the advantages a connection with the great south-western system of rail transportation can give.

WATER WILL GROW. Almost every product of the temperate zone will flourish in the Gila valley, while all the semi-tropical productions for which Southern California has become famous obtain even a greater degree of perfection in the Gila Valley. The orange, lemon and lime ripen fully a month earlier in the season than those of California, and no unsightly bluish of the scale bug disfigures the golden fruit. Grapes, for wine or raisin-making, are especially adapted to the soil and climate, and a superior quality of both are produced. Two crops of grapes are always produced in a single season, and sometimes three crops grow and mature. The warm, dry atmosphere causes the raisins perfectly, and develops their saccharine qualities in a greater degree than by any artificial process. Alfalfa yields from four to eight crops per year, and will average one and one-half to two tons of hay per acre at each cutting, readily worth $10 per ton in a home market. All kinds of vegetables and fruits are cultivated with pronounced success, and always at an immense profit.

The Gila Valley.

(From the Folders.)

Pinal is one of the central tier of counties which embrace the largest portion of the agricultural lands in the Territory. The Gila River rises in the mountains of New Mexico and its waters, augmented by numerous tributaries in Arizona, flow through the Territory from east to west. The San Pedro river also adds to the water supply of the eastern portion of the county.

Its total area is but 5,210 square miles, and yet it is one of the richest counties in the Territory. It possesses large and rich tracts of agricultural land, excellent grazing ranges and the most valuable mines discovered in the west.

Along the San Pedro and the Gila rivers the valley contains the very richest land in Arizona. Water is abundant in both streams, and when properly utilized, nearly every acre of tillable land can be irrigated.

The county is in a prosperous and healthy condition. It has no indebtedness to speak of, and its tax levy is lower than any other county in the Territory.

Florence is the county-seat and the principal town of Pinal county. It is pleasantly situated in the valley of the Gila, and about half a mile from the stream. It is twenty-five miles north of Casa Grande station, on the Southern Pacific Railroad, with which it has daily stage connection. The town is embowered in groves of shade and fruit trees, and streams of water run through every street. The surrounding valley is under an excellent state of cultivation; fields of waving grain and alfalfa and orchards loaded down with delicious fruit meet the eye in every direction. The town has a delightful situation, and with its pleasant homes surrounded by trees, shrubbery and flowers, its pure water and healthy climate; it is one of the most attractive spots in the Territory. Hotels, business houses, a newspaper and all the accessories of a flourishing town are present, and as an indication of its rapid growth is cited the fact that new cement houses are almost invariably rented before the foundations are laid. There is no division of opinion upon the question of its destiny as one of the most important and handsomest cities in Arizona. It is a natural supply point for an extensive mining region to the north and east, and with abundance of water, and a soil of such fruitfulness, it will make rapid strides within the next two years towards metropolitan proportions.

Its altitude is about 1,600 feet above the sea-level, with a climate during the entire year that exceeds that of its famous namesake on the Arno.

IRRIGATING CANALS. The farmer in the Gila valley plants his crops and gathers the harvest without reference to gathering clouds and weather signs, totally indifferent to all meteorological portents. His acres receive the water needed for the growth of the growing crops just at the proper time, and in the proper quantity, by simply lifting the gate of an irrigating ditch, and letting the water flow over the land.

Twelve of these canals or ditches are now in use around Florence, covering an area of rich land approximating thirty thousand acres. By reference to the map given herewith, their course and length may be seen.

In addition to these the Florence Canal Company's large canal has been completed for a distance of fifteen miles from its headgate, and the water now flows through it to a point several miles south of Florence. The canal is to be at once extended in a southerly direction thirty miles further, having sufficient capacity to irrigate 140,000 acres of land. It is twenty-five feet wide on the bottom, and twice that width on top. During the past half year over 40,000 acres of Government land along this canal has been filled up by intending settlers.

Another company has been recently formed for the purpose of constructing huge storage reservoirs in connection with irrigating canals that will add over fifty thousand acres of land to the area irrigated. Nearly every acre under this canal can be entered at the Government price.

WATER WILL GROW.

Almost every product of the temperate zone will flourish in the Gila valley, while all the semi-tropical productions for which Southern California has become famous obtain even a greater degree of perfection in the Gila Valley. The orange, lemon and lime ripen fully a month earlier in the season than those of California, and no unsightly bluish of the scale bug disfigures the golden fruit. Col. C. S. Masten, of the Maricopa & Phoenix railroad, writes that he believes a practical route for a railroad has been found from Tempe to a point eight miles southwest of Pinal and thence to Wheatfields and Globe.—Silver Belt.

Rooted Grapes. Three thousand grape roots for sale cheap; also a lot of ornamental trees and a limited number of Geraniums in pots. J. B. Remy.

Florence, Dec., 8th, 1887.

The finest turnouts in the country and the best stock, at Drew & Bamrick's livery stable.

From the San Pedro.

DUDLEYVILLE, Dec. 14, 1887.

DEAR ENTERPRISE: In obedience to Deputy Jim Thomas' summons thither, prospector, ranchers and cattlemen of the San Pedro are to-day en route for the city of Florence. I sincerely hope that, coming as they do from behind shovels, picks, lariats and Dutch ovens, they will all retain their perpendicular and not allow their strong backs to be bent in town to "buck 'em off."

News, outside of mining, is scarce. The Sample, under G. S. Barnhart's management, is improving as depth is gained, and the developments already warrant reduction works. Supt. Barnhart has upon the dump assorted and ready for shipment quite a quantity of fine ore which he assured us would assay 1400 ozs., which is pretty good for Pinal county. They have erected a whim, and now the ore comes to the surface in a jiffy, 300 pounds at a chatter. Alex. Barker is foreman, and a force of six men are employed. As the mine is opened, more men will be put to work, and systematic development pursued.

Geo. F. Cook is well to the fore with a fine general stock of goods including a good article of wet groceries. (We speak from experience.)

Mr. Cook suffered the loss by death of a fine mule, one of a span he had several times refused $300 for, and is in quest of an animal to replace it.

At the Mammoth, things are progressing finely under the management of Richard Rolands, Esq. The shaft is down 100 feet, making a total depth of 400 feet. The shaft is vertical and the ledge has dipped away, but a cross-cut shows an immense body of the finest gold ore, a heavy iron-stained quartz, literally alive with free gold. Colonel Andrew Wallace is busy at work fitting up an experimental battery of 10 stamps, with pan and settlers, and Prof. Thos. Price, of San Francisco, is confident of being able to work the ore which has proved rebellious heretofore, up to assay value. Well, plenty of $65.00 gold ore and a 100-stamp mill are a happy combination, and will swell the bullion output of Pinal County to a considerable amount. The object of the new company is to prove the mine to the depth of 600 feet, and they confidently expect to obtain sufficient water in the mine at that depth to run 100 stamps, when the mill will be removed to the mine.

Capt. Jack Burgess has been sampling the lead mines of Messrs. Haley & McCullen, in Mineral Creek, for Chicago parties, and finds them large bodies of good grade carbonate ores, and there is every prospect of a stir in that section in the near future. The rise in the price of copper will give an impetus to the copper properties in that section, and with a big plant on Burgess & Gilman's Table Mountain mines, which are sold to Colorado parties, we can make a respectable showing in copper tambien.

Very Truly Yours

Colonel Andrew Wallace is busy at work fitting up an experimental battery of 10 stamps, with pan and settlers, and Prof. Thos. Price, of San Francisco, is confident of being able to work the ore which has proved rebellious heretofore, up to assay value. Well, plenty of $65.00 gold ore and a 100-stamp mill are a happy combination, and will swell the bullion output of Pinal County to a considerable amount. The object of the new company is to prove the mine to the depth of 600 feet, and they confidently expect to obtain sufficient water in the mine at that depth to run 100 stamps, when the mill will be removed to the mine.
