A MELANGE OF SPORT.

The Encinala Preparing for an Aquatic Opera.

A PRETTY SIGHT PROMISED.

A Platic Organization That Had to Surrender Its Building--Base Fishing in the Russian River.

It is about twelve years since "Pinnacore" on the water was attempted by the Pacific Yacht Club, and those who witnessed the performance will remember the affair as being one of the most enjoyable aquatic features that has taken place in the vicinity of Sausalito.

The Encinala Yacht Club of Alameda is now determined to outdo anything in the way of a "Pinnacore" production that has ever been attempted under the light of the silvery moon, and on the evenings of September 30 and October 1 lovers of good music and good acting will have an opportunity to see Little Buttercup play her best respects to old woman Luna.

The performance will be no ordinary one, for instead of the time-honored stage the opera will be produced on the deck of a red-deck water ship rigged special, which resembles H. M. S. Pinnacore.

The craft will be anchored off the Encinala Point, and the performance will be given on the deck of the ship, which will be fully manned and equipped, as in real life. The admiral's arrival will be most realistic. This gentleman of high distinction will be rowed up in a small boat and Miss Buttercup will have her dressing compartment on one of the club's yachts, which will make her inaugural appearance before the eyes of the club members.

The committee in charge of the arrangements consists of G. W. Emmons, Dr. Humphreys and C. S. Neal.

The Olympic Club will not have any further entertainments at its present quarters in the Alcazar building. The new directors, who will be installed on Monday evening, will give their time and attention to making preparations for the ceremonies which will attend the opening of the new building.

Barnes will address the club on this great occasion and the chorus of 500 voices will be a feature in itself well worth going to some distance to hear.

The salt-water baths will be an adjunct which only the Olympic Club will possess. The water will come direct from the ocean, and the boys who delight in a dip in the briny can plunge until they are out of sight.

The Pacific Athletic Club is figuring upon leasing some building in which to hold its next monthly contest. Up to a few weeks ago the club had the use of the Republican gymnasium, which structure will be hereafter used for other purposes.

The first trap-shooting tournament of the Sportsmen's Protective Association will be held at the Oakland race-track on the 18th inst. American shooting ranges will govern all matches, and the prizes will be divided into 50, 30 and 20 per cent. The first match will be at twelve live birds, the second at twenty-five blue rocks, and the third at twenty blue rocks. Seventeen other matches that are on the programme will be open to all comers.

About two years ago a few black bass were planted in the Russian River as an experiment. They propagated and although many were killed by poachers, who used giant powder extensively, there is now thirty good sport to be had in the river, not far distant from the railroad crossing at Dunsmuir.

Dr. Dean, Al Wilson, Professor Perkins and a few other well-known devotees of the pastime had good catches this season. Bass-fishing is, however, very uncertain sport, and a trip to the river will not give satisfactory results on all occasions.

The Pacific Coast Fishing Club will give a grand meeting at Ocean View Park on November 1.

The prizes, which amount to $500, will be the largest ever given by any club in this State for a meeting held in an enclosure.

Billy Jordan, grand orator of the California Athletic Club, received a letter last evening from the champion middle-weight, Bob Fitzsimmons, stating that Jimmy Carroll, the light weight pugilist, had an attack of vertigo, and that he would be unable to look for Carroll's recovery, but the fight managed to pull through all right and is now thoroughly reinstated.

McNULTY'S DOOM RE-SEALED

The Court Says He Must Hang October 14.

Another Brief Respite From an Inconclusive Death Accorded to the Convicted Murderer of Collins.

The sword of Damocles is once more suspended by a single hair over the head of John McNulty, the convicted murderer of Collins.

Ever since the killing he has been the center of legal tactics, for and against, until now he has lost hope as well as all sensation of fear and seems utterly apathetic.

His life is as if it had passed out of his hands.

JUST A LITTLE BROCHURE.

But It Expresses Mr. Keefer's Feelings.

THINGS HE LIKES NOT.

How He Served Mrs. A. E. Luhrs and After All Is Thrust Into Exterior Darkness for His Trouble.

W. A. Keefer, who sued Mrs. Annie E. Luhrs some months ago to recover $25,000, which he claims as a just compensation for services rendered, has issued a brochure on his side of the question.

As a legal literary production it presents some very novel and at the same time interesting features.

"I just issued the work as a guide for my attorneys," explains Mr. Keefer.

Mrs. Luhrs is the widow of N. C. Luhrs of the firm of Wheaton & Luhrs. He died in 1883, and left his entire estate to his widow and daughter.

About two years after this occurrence Mr. Keefer appeared upon the scene, and after performing several trivial acts of kindness he demanded that Mrs. Luhrs' property be sold for the widow he was installed as general financial agent.

When once firmly placed in that position he took hold of things in a Bismarckian way, and according to his statements the investments he made for the widow soon increased her income from $300 a month to $1500.

In his collected evidence Mr. Keefer has not neglected to delve into all the mysteries of the business conducted by Wheaton & Luhrs, nor failed to tell how and when and where Mrs. Luhrs got all her money and how she expended it.

But this was not all; he attended Mrs. Luhrs when ill.

He also took Mrs. Luhrs and her daughter out for a summering. Further yet did he go; he ventured into business as a chef in the Luhrs household and prepared the meals.

But at last the crash came. Keefer was undermined by jealous relatives, and his throne fell, and he with it.

NEW WATER FRONT RUMORS.

More About the California and Nevada Railroad--Mrs. Martin's Lingering Case of Fattening Prologed.

The San Francisco Bulletin recently printed an interview with Captain J. W. Smith giving some information about the California and Nevada Railroad not generally known, and setting at rest a good many speculations previously indulged in.

The interview, which was the first authentic one obtained since the beginning of the road, was copied in nearly every paper in Alameda County, and yesterday A. A. Grant printed a letter denying some of Captain Smith's statements.

For the purpose of learning how matters stand, a CALL reporter last evening interviewed a gentleman closely connected with the road and who knows all about its history.

"He stated that Mr. Grant told the truth when he said that the Grant Bros. and General Williamson have no contract to extend the road, but that he did not go far enough."

The Grant brothers and General Williamson chiefly form the Pacific Construction and Improvement Company, and the company has such a contract.

A. A. Grant says that the company is operating the road under a lease, and the gentleman interviewed stated that if the contract to take charge of the road and to extend it can be called a lease then Mr. Grant is telling the truth.

As previously stated, Captain Smith does not own the road, as never did.

He owned upon it, however, which are placed in New York.

He, like the company of which Mr. Grant is vice-president, at one time had contracts to build a portion of the road, and did build it to Wagner's ranch, a distance of twenty-two miles, from where the company was to extend it to Walnut Creek and, also, to transform it into a broad-gauge line.

In the spring of 1889 he came to California and was engaged in various occupations until the advance of age rendered him dependent on others for support.

JURY-FIXING DOESN'T PAY.

Squires Gets Eight Years for Embracery.

The Court Comments Severely on the Degrading Character of the Crime of Which He Was Recently Convicted.

After several delays obtained by his attorney the notorious jury-briber, John H. Squires, appeared yesterday morning in Judge Murphy's court to be sentenced for his crime.

Squires, whose pale face appeared all the paler for the tangle of hair encircling it, was accompanied by his wife, a little woman of apparently great nervous force.

She sat beside the husband, casting alternately furtive glances in the direction of the court and anxious eyes toward Counsel J. D. Whelan.

Upon Whelan's efforts to obtain a new trial denied plainly the wife's hope for her convicted husband.

As soon as the case was called, Attorney Whelan, as if in answer to Mrs. Squires' appealing look, sprang to his feet with a motion to set aside the verdict on the customary grounds that errors had been made in the trial sufficient to entitle the defendant to a new hearing.

The court denied the motion.

But Mr. Whelan rose again with a plea for an arrest of judgment on the same motion, and the court, looking at the defendant, said: "The prisoner was directed to stand up and receive sentence."

He said embracery was a peculiarly dangerous form of crime and one to be specially guarded against and specially punished.

The entire security of life and property rested upon that jury, and tampering with that jury was a crime of the highest order.

It was almost impossible to overrate the enormity to the commonwealth of a crime of this nature and character.

He therefore sentenced the prisoner to eight years' incarceration in San Quentin prison.

THE BEAR AND THE CORNET.

A Story Which Illustrates the Power of Music on the Savage Beast.

Calhoun Special to Atlanta Constitution.

Mr. H. J. Roff, a pleasure-seeker from Calhoun who is spending a while in the Cohutta Mountains, experienced an adventure with a big bear on Grassy Mountain which he will never be likely to forget.

He was roaming around that high mountain the other day, and, never dreaming of the bear-haunted, dangerous ground he was treading, but from that lofty height was viewing, with poetic admiration, the little valleys and scattered farmhouses far below him.

Suddenly the popping of some things reached the ear of Mr. Roff, and instantly looking up he was horrified to behold only a few yards away a huge black bear.

No knife, no pistol, nothing had Mr. Roff save a cornet, which he had brought along to give comfort when he should be tired of wandering and sit down to rest.

When Mr. Roff saw this animal he knew that, being unarmed, there was nothing to do but try to escape, and, with a few leaps, he reached a tree several feet high.

It was a fearful moment. Mr. Roff had no more than succeeded in reaching the first limb than he saw the fearful beast making toward the tree.

Mr. Roff thought of it and he commenced to blow furiously, blast on his cornet. Whether the bear thought this was the signal for the dogs or not, certain it is the animal paused, listened a few moments and then scampered off into the swamp, leaving his intended victim master of the situation.
