

HER LONG SIEGE.

Nellie Horton's Testimony Concluded.

ONE WITNESS IS MISSING.

Attorney Heynemann Again Riles Judge Wallace—Compliments Pass Between Counsel.

Nellie Horton looked worn and weary as she entered Judge Wallace's courtroom yesterday morning, where she is being tried for the killing of Charles R. Hagans.

Her composure, however, returned to her by degrees, and she got through the day's work without any of the scenes that marked her introduction to the witness-stand.

Proceeding with his cross-examination of the defendant Mr. Deuprey introduced a letter written to Miss Horton by Charles Hagans, in which he expressed his annoyance in rather harsh terms at her constant pursuit of him and at the inquiries which she was in the habit of making concerning him.

"Tell me," said Mr. Deuprey, "is it a fact that on receipt of that letter you loaded your pistol?"

"No, sir," the letter had nothing to do with it. I kept my pistol always loaded."

Shortly afterward Attorney Heynemann, the defendant's counsel, contrived once more to irritate Judge Wallace. He objected to Mr. Deuprey speaking of his client's "pursuit" of Hagans, and insisted that another word should be substituted.

"Well, all I can say, sir," retorted the court, "is that I am sorry for your opinion of the jury. Sit down." And Mr. Heynemann sat.

The defendant admitted that she had heard the testimony of one of the witnesses for the prosecution who said that on one occasion he overheard the defendant propose to Hagans to accompany him to his room in Mrs. Davis' house in Oakland.

"I don't know where you got your information from," she said, angrily. "Not from me, for I know nothing of all this."

Re-examined by Mr. Heynemann, Nellie Horton said that she joined the Catholic church by the request of Harry Straub, to whom she was engaged at the time.

"Yes, sir," replied the defendant before the Judge had time to rule the question out. The defendant was then allowed to step down, after nearly three days' examination.

Attorney Heynemann then made another energetic endeavor to introduce in evidence the deposition of the witness Giles respecting an assault made by Hagans upon the defendant in Golden Gate Park.

"I rule that out," said Judge Wallace. Mr. Heynemann was not satisfied with that, however, and made another brief speech, showing that according to recent Supreme Court decisions the testimony should be admitted.

"I rule it out," was the Judge's laconic reply. Mr. Heynemann next offered in evidence the testimony of the witness Huestes. A bench warrant had been issued for this witness, but he had not been found.

Witnesses were then called to testify as to the character of the defendant previous to the shooting. But as the prosecution admitted her previous good character for "peace and quiet" their presence was not needed.

Attorney Heynemann once more interposed a number of objections, all of which were overruled by the Judge. Mr. Deuprey then again said to Mr. Heynemann, "Don't make any more breaks like that. If you do I'll call you down."

The witness said that she did not remember at what time the money she was possessed of was deposited in the bank for her, nor whether it was previous to her first meeting with Hagans.

"I don't remember," she answered. The witness said that she did not remember at what time the money she was possessed of was deposited in the bank for her, nor whether it was previous to her first meeting with Hagans.

Concerning money matters, in response to questions she was unable to give any dates of the various occasions when she sent Hagans money while he was at the Don Juan mine in Trinity County.

"Whatever letters you did register were registered in the name of 'Nellie Horton to Charles Hagans,'" asked Mr. Deuprey.

"Yes, sir." "Did you address any letters in the name 'Charles R. Hoyt' or in any other name than Hagans?"

"No, sir. Never." The events of the night of July 9 were then recalled. The witness stated that she accompanied Hagans to the house at 207 Eddy street because there was no other place where they could go to have a quiet chat.

REALTY REVIEWED Property That Is Most in Demand.

CITIES IN COMPARISON.

Money Is Coming In at the Savings Banks and There Are Prospects for Good Business.

That the real estate market continues without material improvement is vouched for by the San Francisco Real Estate Circular for November, published by Thomas Magee, which says: "The best demand is for small and medium-priced houses and lots worth from $2500 to $4000 and for vacant lots worth from $1000 to $2500 each."

There is some inquiry also for business properties worth from $10,000 to $15,000. Business is much restricted by the fact that the savings banks are not lending, and that depositors cannot for the moment immediately get all of their money if they need it.

As an instance of the final effect of boss rule it is stated: "The rottenness of Brooklyn's government is now such that many New York banks refuse to loan money on Brooklyn property, or purchase her bonds, till a clean administration is inaugurated."

EX-JUSTICE HOSMER.

Death of a Distinguished Juror at an Advanced Age.

Ex-Chief Justice Hosmer of Montana died in this city yesterday at the advanced age of 78 years and 11 months. He was a native of Henderson, N. Y.

After being admitted to the bar he went to Ohio and practiced in the Northwestern circuit from 1838 to 1860, with the exception of between 1848 and 1855, when he was engaged in journalism.

Under the caption, "Won't buy when prices are low," it is held that if Solomon were again upon earth and proclaimed that this is the time to buy city real estate, the prices are low, not one money-holder in a score would listen to him.

The pretty general belief that savings banks will soon be loaning money because the financial situation has improved with remarkable rapidity is noted. Notices of withdrawals on the part of depositors are every day decreasing, and deposits, in fair volume, are every day coming in.

A Schoolteacher's Wrongs. Harriet M. Fairchild has applied to the Superior Court for a writ of mandamus, to compel the School Directors to re-appoint her as principal of the Potrero School, from which position she was removed on July 1 last, and also to recover a salary of $150 a month from that date.

STARVED HIS MEN. Sailors on Half Rations Six Months.

Several Vessels in a Two Days' Hurricane With Their Decks Swept by Seas.

The barkentine Marion arrived yesterday from Navidad, Mexico, with a cargo of logs and a crew of sailors who claim that they have not had a dozen satisfactory meals during the past six months.

September 17 they have been on half rations, and for the past four days their only food was beans, bread and coffee. The vessel is now in the stream, and as soon as she is docked formal charges will be preferred against Captain Rosenlund before the United States Shipping Commissioner.

A CALL reporter boarded the vessel yesterday afternoon and received from the sailors, who vouched for the statements of their spokesman, the following recital of their treatment: "Practically, we have been on short rations five and a half months, because from the time we left Eureka in May until we got to Champerico we had to do without meat. The salt beef was putrid; still, which order was obeyed, but the stuff was never overboard. At Champerico two Italian sailors who protested to the captain against the lack of meat were thrown overboard."

There was opportunity to bring the case before the American consul at Champerico, but the men feared they would meet the fate of the Italians and lose their pay by being beaten and driven ashore. While in port, working hard discharging lumber in a hot climate, the crew received a half pound of meat twice a week, whereas the law provides one and a half pounds a day.

Before sailing from Navidad the steward called the captain's attention to the shortness of provisions, which were clearly not half enough for an ordinary voyage, but he paid no attention to the matter.

Scarcely had the vessel got to sea when Captain Rosenlund ordered the men on half rations, and for forty-three days not one of the crew received the meal which the law requires to be provided them. Since last Saturday nothing but beans, bread and coffee was served them.

Corroborating the statement of the crew, the steward went further and said: "When I spoke to the captain about the outfit beef he said, 'To hell with them, it's good enough for them. Let them eat it or starve.'"

The mate and the second mate of the Marion being asked by the reporter for a statement of the captain's inhuman conduct, declined to speak. Asked whether the story told by the sailors was in substance true they did not deny any part of it.

Driven by a fresh breeze quite a fleet of deep-water ships got in yesterday. All of them were in a hurricane, October 22 and 23. The British ship Metropolis, 55 days from Newcastle, lapped 48 hours in a high, confused sea, her decks being full of water to the rails and the cabin flooded. The Mauna Ala from Honolulu caught the gale with hurricane force from the north, a tremendous sea breaking. It was impossible to show any sail to it. She had recourse to oil bags, which acted like a charm on the sea. For 48 hours she lay
