At noon, Saturday, the Burlington gave the necessary three days' notice to the Western Lines Passenger association that on May 7th it would sell one-way tickets from Denver to the Missouri river for $10. This is the outgrowth of dissatisfaction over the "homeseekers" excursions.

The employes of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad company at the end of 1892 numbered 28,745. At the end of 1894 the falling off in traffic had cut down the number to 21,115, a reduction of 7,630. The gross earnings of this company in 1894 were less by $6,375,837 than in 1893, and its expenditures for operations were cut down $5,023,912.—World Herald.

A Snyder, an engineer on the B. & M., was in town, last evening, looking after a board bill the Kirby Specialty Company had made at McCook, and forgot to settle for before leaving.—Station Agent Lawritson reports over sixty tons of coal short at the shed at this place. We hope the company does not believe the people of Cambridge guilty of stealing such poor coal as the New Castle.—Cambridge Kaleidoscope.

Word from Wisconsin conveys the news of the death of Tom Murphy, a former Burlington engineer before the great strike. Tom had been a sufferer all winter with rheumatism. He was a well known character on the Western division in the early days, where he had a great reputation for physical prowess. He was city marshal of Hastings in the early history of that city. Many will hear of his death with regret.

The Railway Age in a recent issue says, editorially, that there will be about 23,000 miles of road built during 1895, in the United States and territories, which will be more than has been constructed in the past four years. If that is the case, and the Railway Age speaks authoritatively presumably, Nebraska will get her proportion. Red Cloud should, therefore, look after her interests along the railway line and see if it is not possible to secure the Rock Island.—Red Cloud Chief.
