School Teacher Dies After Assault at Santa Fe.

One of the most brutal crimes in the history of New Mexico had its culmination at 5 o'clock Monday morning when Miss Gertrude Montgomery, a beat-school teacher of Shreveport, La., died in the Santa Fe hospital after undergoing untold agonies for days at the hands of human fiends, who, from all that can be gained, captured her while alone and held her prisoner for five days before leaving her wounded and outraged to creep painfully hopelessly on bleeding hands and knees over the sharp rocks of the arroyo where she was found, in the vain effort of help.

Three convicts are being held for the crime. One of them, an American, is believed from a description given by Miss Montgomery before she died, to be the guilty man.

Should this man be shown to be guilty a lynching will probably occur.

The fate of Miss Montgomery is the second that has shocked New Mexico in the last few days. The story of assault and murder of Miss Sarah Hatton, aged 18, near Santa Rosa is veiled in mystery, but the horror of the details are perhaps only withheld from sight.—Albuquerque Tribune.

DROUTH RESISTING FRUITS.

By E. Parsons, Parker, Colo.

On my ranch, with a precipitation of 14 to 15 inches, we have no difficulty in growing all the varieties of fruit that are hardy in the west, and make a good profit out of the business, but for those who have less precipitation or who have not the time to provide the necessary cultivation, it is best to plant only those varieties which need the least attention and will stand the most drouth. First among these we find the western wild plum. They grow anywhere, and, if planted in plowed land and cultivated once in a while, the size is much improved and the yield enormous. I know of no drouth that could kill a wild plum tree, and have watched them pretty close for years. They are not so easy to transplant, but can be grown from the seed and will bear in three years. I have them in my orchard and around my house; many of them are volunteers from seed thrown away.

Three or four pits should be planted in a hill in the fall, and when they come up in the spring can be thinned down to one in a hill. As soon as the plums are ripe is the time to plant, and after a few years a wild plum grove will take of itself.

The grape vine flourishes in countries where for six or seven months in the year it never rains. It blossoms late and bears a crop every year, and the dryer the better the grapes seem to be. Give them plenty of room, cultivate when the ground needs loosening and keep the weeds out. They should be covered with a little dry dirt the first and second winters.

The London market currant and any of the common gooseberries grow beautifully with a little cultivation. We have our currant patch on top of a dry hill. They are planted eight feet apart and the fruit is large.

The most vigorous grape to plant, and one of the largest, is the Agawam; the Concord, Diamond, Worden, and all the common eastern grapes do well. The Morello and Montmorency cherry will stand more drouth than any locust and are both useful and ornamental.

Dear Sir:
Received your favor relative to the crate of cantaloupes which you shipped us. As to the quality of this stock, it was everything that could be desired. I cut every cantaloupe in the crate and while a good many of them were so ripe that they had turned sour, we could see very easily that the quality was there when shipped. If you can produce a cantaloupe of this grade, we do not think there is any question but what you can find profitable markets for your crop. We feel confident that we could distribute about 400 acres of this stock to advantage. It would no doubt do better were it to arrive on our market a little earlier than this, and would like to have you advise me whether or not you can place it on the market earlier. It would not pay you take hold of this deal under about 350 or 400 acres at planting time; you cannot figure that all who promise to plant, and in fact those who do plant, will get the proper stand and have melons at picking time. A great many of them will get a poor stand and get discouraged and allow their fields to die off. You can figure that at least one fourth of the acreage planted will never mature to ship from, and it would be well if you could get 500 acres promised to plant. Where you only have a small acreage it is a great advantage for the early stuff, as you have few or no markets for your express shipments, and it is a big advantage to be able to load cars almost from the start and with less than 300 acres it is a hard matter to be able to ship car-lots early.

We are certainly very much pleased with the quality of this stock and are in hopes that we will be able to arrange with you to plant a good acreage there for next year.

Would like to have you advise me just as early as possible so can save you some of our best seed to plant next year.

We are now cutting all of our seed in Colorado and will commence to distribute it in the very near future, and if you are figuring on planting will want to be sure and get you the very best seed that we can get. You will require for planting and replanting about one pound to the acre.

Hoping to have the pleasure of hearing from you shortly, I remain,

Very truly yours,

Editor Fort Sumner Review:
I note what the M. O. Goggins Co. say in regard to our being able to get in the market earlier with our cantaloupes. I feel confident we can have them ripen two to three weeks earlier than we did the past season, as we did not plant until the middle of May; the last frost we had was the last night in April.

Winter plowing of the land and cultivating of the crop will do a great deal toward advancing a crop of cantaloupes or any other cultivated crop.

Yours etc.,
R. C. Nisbet.

What is the Strobel Airship?

That is the question people are asking who plan to go to the big Twenty Ninth New Mexico in Albuquerque next month, where the Strobel flying machine will make three or more flights daily.

The Strobel airship, which has won more prize money at international expositions than any other air craft ever made, consists of an immense spindle-shaped gas bag, of tough, light fabric some seventy five feet long and thirty feet in diameter.

Suspended to the great gas bag is a long light aluminum and wood framework, carrying the powerful but light engines which drive the propeller at the rear of the airship. The operator is seated midway of this framework where the helm of this giant of the air answers his every touch as readily as a motor boat.

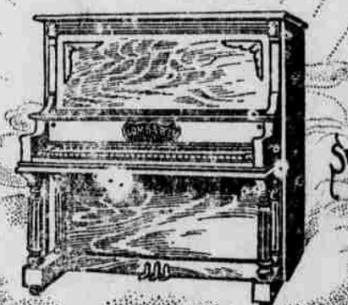

When he rises, he slides back a few feet the nose of the ship and the propeller drives her upward. When he descends he slides forward, the balloons prowl dips and he glides earthward. The ship is under perfect control at all times and swoops through the air in any direction as easily as a huge bird, turning and rising and falling as the aviator wishes.

It is the perfection of aerial navigation in the realm of the dirigible balloon and the flights at the Albuquerque fair will offer the people of the whole southwest their first chance to see a real sample of man's conquest of the upper air.
