WINNING A FRIEND.

A Story That is Refreshing in These Money-Grubbing Days.
Here is a little story which never before has been told in print, but which is surely as well worth the telling as the histories of wars and crimes and sharp tricks in the money market with which our papers and minds are filled nowadays.
A certain shrewd Hebrew merchant, whom we shall call Lejeve, built a few years ago a huge department store in one of our large cities. It was planned to occupy a whole block. But the corner lot, forty feet square, was owned by an old German watchmaker named Weber, who refused to sell it.
"Weber, I will not give up my house," he said. "I bought it when property here was cheap, and I have lived and worked here for fifty-two years. I will not sell it."
"But," Lejeve patiently reasoned, "you virtually gave up business years ago. You make or sell no watches now. Your sons have other pursuits. You don't live in the house—only sit in this office all day long, looking out of the window."
"The office was a small corner room in the second story, with an open fireplace around which were set some old Dutch tiles. A battered walnut desk was fitted into the wall, and before it stood an old chair and a sheepskin cover.
"The old man's face grew red. "You are right," he said. "I don't work here. I have enough to live on without work. But I am an old man and want to live in this room. It is home to me. When my wife and I first came here, we were poor. I worked in the shop below, but we lived here. Greta fried the cakes and worst over that fire; the cradle stood in that corner. Little Jan was born here; his coffin was carried out of that door. Greta is dead for many a long year. But when I sit here and look out of the window, I think she is with me. For thirty years she and I looked out of that window and talked of the changes in the street below."
"Lejeve was silenced for the time, but began his arguments again the next day, doubling his offer.
"The lot is worth that to me," he said, "as I own the block, but to nobody else. You are throwing away a large sum which would be a great help to your sons that you may include a bit of sentiment. Have you the right to do that?"
"Weber was hard pushed. His boys were struggling on with small means; this money would set them on their feet, would enable them to marry. What right had he to spoil their lives that he might sit and dream of old times? The next day he gave his consent, and the sale was made.
"The old man lived in the suburbs; he never came to that part of the town while the building was in progress. When it was finished and the huge department store was thrown open to the public, Lejeve one day asked him to come in. He led him through the great crowded salerooms, piled one on top of another for miles, and then drew him into a narrow passage and flung open a door.
"There is your little office just as you left it," he said. "We have built around it and beside it and over it, but not a brick in it has been touched. There are your fire with the old tiles and your desk, and your chair was brought back today. It is your office, Mr. Weber, and if you will sit here as long as you live and think of them that are gone and watch the changes in the street below I shall feel there is a blessing on the big house, because I have a friend in it."—Congregationalist.

MAKING A BASEBALL.

An Operation That Requires Much Skill and Fine Work.
The production of a baseball is an operation almost as unknown to the public as its use is familiar.
Yet nearly 4,000,000 balls a year, or about 12,000 a day, are manufactured by one Pennsylvania factory alone, and for a great many of these $1.50 apiece is paid.
A remarkable amount of skill and fine workmanship is needed to turn out a ball that will stand, even for a short time, the powerful batting of the big players or will come up to the requirements for league work.
The various steps in the manufacture of a first class baseball are briefly as follows:
It is first a solid ball of Para rubber just an inch through. The ball is placed in a machine by a boy tender and is automatically wound with a strong, pure woolen yarn. The winding is done with an engine that no human fingers could equal, and the thick, blue mixed wool forms a perfectly uniform covering for the core.
This layer is made just an inch thick. When the right amount of yarn has been wound on it, the machine stops automatically. The ball, now two inches thick, is removed and another core set.
The partly finished balls are next dipped—that is, they are dropped into a transparent fluid called "plastic cement," which is really a kind of composition. This fluid is very adhesive, and when it enters the wool covering there is a solidification that prevents the ball from ever being knocked out of shape. So certain is this, in fact, that the company guarantees to replace all balls that are so injured.
The balls are next wound again, this time with a certain definite thickness of three ply white yarn. This is covered with a three ply blue yarn until it has reached the requisite size of nine inches in circumference. All of these winding processes have been automatic, and the balls appear of exactly the same size and weight. But no chances are taken, and each is weighed several times during the final winding so that accuracy may be assured.
After being dipped in the cement again the ball is ready for covering. The covers are made of soft tanned horsehide, which is as soft and fine as the best white kid. For the best balls only eighteen covers can be got out of one hide, as only the very choicest parts can be used.
The hide is first knee staked. That is, it is stretched backward and forward over a knee high stake by a strong boy till it will stretch no more. The cutting is done by machinery. The cover is in two pieces, each the shape of the figure 8. A machine cuts out these pieces and perforates them ready for sewing. These machines are wonderfully accurate and very rapid.
The balls are placed for covering in dampers of wood, and the covers are fastened first with brass staples and then with strong cotton thread of the best quality. It takes about fifteen minutes to sew the cover on a ball. This requires considerable muscle, and only men are employed on the work.
The ball is still rough on the seams. It is rolled in hand and a few hours later by machinery, whence it emerges the completed article ready for packing and selling.
The whole process of making a ball takes just thirty minutes, and it often happens that its life on the diamond is no longer. The professional leagues usually put in play during a game from four to six new balls, which are never again used except for practice.
Amateurs put in play two, three or four balls, according to their wealth. Where all the old balls are in a question that has never been solved, but several million disappear every season. When the winter comes on, the season's output has gone.—New York World.

WHOLESALE RESTAURANTS.

Places Where Small Eating Houses Obtain Cooked Food.
If it were asserted without any explanation that there were restaurants in New York which cooked large quantities of food day and night and yet which never sold a mouthful to a person within their doors, it would certainly arouse doubt or ridicule. Yet such is the fact. There are more than forty establishments of this class in New York. Their customers are not hungry men, but restaurants, eating booths, oyster stands and free lunch counters. There was a time when every place of this sort owned and used its own kitchen, but the increase of rents, the decrease in the size of store property and the greater economy necessitated by keen competition have brought the wholesale restaurant into existence and made it a financial success.
Most of these affairs are on the east side and are managed by Germans, Hebrews, Swiss and English, their numbers being in the order named. They supply roast beef, lamb, veal, mutton, corn beef and pork, pot roasts, baked and boiled fish, fried oysters, clams, scallops, eels, fried balls and soft shell crabs, boiled potatoes, cabbage, turnips and beets.
A few supply a larger bill of fare, but the demand for their goods is comparatively limited. They purchase good, wholesome material, employ excellent cooks, own efficient delivery wagons and run affairs upon a good business basis.
When you pass an oyster stand and see nicely fried oysters and soft shell crabs neatly piled upon a platter and decorated with little sprigs of parsley, twice out of three times you look at the wares of these establishments. The trier restaurants in the business districts, and especially those dependent on clerks and workmen, depend almost entirely upon the wholesale restaurants for their food. Oddly enough they can sell their cooked food to the retail restaurants for less than what the latter would pay for the raw materials. This comes from buying wholesale in large quantities, in cooking on a very large scale and in utilizing all the waste products.—New York Post.

She Played the Trump Card.

"How did she get here?" At a famous dancing assembly this was the quite audible comment made by several married belles when a beautiful young matron as yet on the outskirts of the exclusive set entered the room. The newcomer, whose first appearance it was, proved herself quite equal to the occasion. She had a nodding acquaintance with nearly every woman in the room. Some of them even went to her luncheon parties. Calmly turning to the most supercilious critic in the echelon as though in reply:
"How did I get here? I drove here, my dear Mrs. Crossbeam. Did you walk?"—Lippincott's Magazine.

A Coachman's Blunder.

One day at Edinburgh Lord Rosebery realized the disadvantage of owning swift horses. His brougham had met him at Waverly station to take him to Dalmeny. Lord Rosebery opened the door of the carriage to put in some papers and then turned away. The coachman, too well trained to look round, heard the door shut, and thinking that his master was inside, set off at once. Pursuit was attempted, but what was there in Edinburgh streets could overtake those horses? The coachman drove seven miles until he reached a point in the Dalmeny parks where it was his lordship's custom to alight and open a gate. Here the brougham stood for some minutes awaiting Lord Rosebery's convenience.
At last the coachman became uneasy and dismounted. His brain reeled when he saw an empty brougham. He could have sworn to seeing his lordship enter. There were his papers. What had happened? With quaking hand the horses were turned, and driving back the coachman looked fearfully along the sides of the road. He finally met Lord Rosebery traveling in great good humor by the omnibus.

The Cook Problem.

A system of itinerant cooks comes as a suggestion from England toward solving the great problem of domestic servants. This would give variety to the life of the household drudge, and the palate of the employer would be relieved of the monotony of fare from which it suffers under the ministrations of one and the same mistress of the kitchen. The plan is that a certain number of families of almost the same financial status should form a circuit, around which the cooks should travel, serving for a fixed period in each family and then moving on to the next until the circuit is completed. Why not reverse the arrangement and pay due regard to the importance of the queen of the kitchen? Let the cook be a permanent part of the household and let the families travel about the circuit of homes rented or owned in common? There are great possibilities in this system of itinerancy. A suggestion has been made of itinerant sons and daughters for ill assorted families.
Clergymen's Salaries.
There are not ten preachers today in the United States whose salary is $10,000 a year, while there are men at work with salaries of not $1,000 in ten years. The average salary of the average clergyman in the average community may be stated on the best authority to be about $800.—Exchange.
