VIRGINIA—In the Circuit Court for the County of Accomack, in the vacation of the said Court the 14th day of November, A. D., 1906.
 Harriet Northan, Plaintiff, against Parker Nock, Elias Hope, Ziah Hope, Sulle Williams, John Hall, Peggie Nock, James Nock, Henry Nock, Isaac Nock, Harvey Nock, Isaac Taylor and Sarah Taylor, his wife, in right of said wife, and James Nock (of Emma), Defendants.

In Chancery.
 The object of this suit is to sell, for purposes of partition, amongst the heirs of James Nock, dec'd., a lot of land situated near Mapsville, in the County of Accomack, Virginia, containing 2 acres more or less, and bounded by the land of David D. Abbott, Sr., and others.
 Affidavit having been made before the Clerk of said Court that Isaac Nock, one of the defendants in the above entitled cause, is a non-resident of the State of Virginia, on the motion of the plaintiff, by its attorneys, it is ordered that he, the said non-resident defendant, do appear here within fifteen days after the publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interests; and that this order be published once a week for four successive weeks in the "Peninsula Enterprise," a newspaper published at Accomack C. H., Virginia, and also posted at the front door of the Court-House of the said County on the Third Monday in November, A. D., 1906.

RIVER PILOTS. Skill of the Men Who Steer on New York Ferryboats.

The best helmsmen in the world are those who steer on ferryboats. The idea of a ferryboat is a float that crosses the water from shore to shore, and that, in fact, is what it is. But the complications of commerce and tide, with the added factors of difficulty of fog, coupled with the necessity of crossing on time, make upon the wheelman of a ferryboat demands that no steersman or pilot elsewhere has to meet. As commerce increases difficulties increase, and the pilot of a ferryboat by the law of development becomes a factor of importance and seriousness.
 For example, the North river ferryboats, each one of which crosses the river once every half hour, is steered by a pilot who stands watch ten or twelve hours a day. He therefore on an average makes twenty to twenty-four transits as full of responsibility as that of a pilot bringing in a big ship past Sandy Hook. But, unlike the pilot who can wait for tide or the passage of ships to give him a clear road, he must make his time. He has trains to meet at the Jersey side, mails to deliver and thousands of determined passengers who must be landed on either shore and promptly.

How well he manages his apparently unwieldy craft in the absence of accidents indicates. How nearly he comes to having them is a matter that few of the thousands who ride safely beneath him ever guess. But he knows. Clear eyed, clear brained, careful, quick, silent, intelligent, and, more than that, intuitively informed, he carries his big, shapeless boat across seas more dangerous than the ocean and brings her into port with a tenderness that suggests the kisses of lovers as she pushes her docile nose into the embracing slip.
 There are thirty-four ferry lines crossing East and North rivers. They send out a boat on an average during daylight hours every seven minutes. They carry an average of 300 passengers. Some of them cross each other in their line of route. All of them encounter the general movement of river traffic. But collisions almost never happen, and time is so well kept that even the kicking submerge has no complaint to make.—New York Press.

Dark Days For English Art.
 English art, official English art, stands just where it has stood for these many years, and the Royal Academy is lucky inasmuch as it can count upon the work of one foreign master for its annual exhibitions. I once met an artist friend on the steps of Burlington House. Each wondered what in the world the other was doing there—if he was in search of pleasurable artistic sensations. I had just been in to see Sargent's contribution. He was going in for the same purpose. I thought of him last summer when I saw once more that without Sargent the academy would be an overwhelming bore. What is it made of? Furlongs of canvas without any elements of interest what ever; laboriously built up compositions, historical, sentimental, "conscientious" beyond words and ineffably fat; gaudy, pompous portraits; commonplace landscapes; at long intervals a creditable piece of painting, strayed in as if by accident, but in general a disheartening mass of mediocre, routine work. Criticism beats in vain against the fortress of reaction. There is something pathetic and droll about the efforts made to disturb its inertia.—Royal Courtier in Atlantic.

The Caddie and the Sabbath.
 "At the famous St. Andrews links," said Andrew Carnegie, "the Sabbath is respected. Indeed, all over Scotland the Sabbath is respected in a remarkable way.
 "Going one day in the autumn on the St. Andrews links, I said to my caddie, 'Pumpkin, Pipe, what is the matter with you?'
 "'Angus, man, the leaves are falling. The green is turning red and brown. Winter will soon be upon us. And do you get much caddyding to do in the winter, Angus?'
 "'Angus frowned gloomily.
 "'Na, na,' said he, blowing his nose.
 "'There's nae muckle caddyding in winter. If it's no' snaw, it's frost; if it's no' frost it's rain, an' if it's fine it's sure to be the Sabbath.'—Indianapolis News.

Christmas Superstitions.
 There are many Christmas superstitions long held as articles of faith that are to be recalled—how that oxen kneel in their stalls at midnight on Christmas eve in adoration of the Nativity and for one hour have the power of speech. For that one hour, too, the most docile of oxen, the most tame of sheep, cease to clank his chains, the daughter of Herodias may pause in the dance in which she is condemned to spin forever and Pilate's ghost ceases its wanderings on Mount Pilatus. It was believed, too, that the sound of church bells could be heard wherever a church had stood, though no trace remain, and that on that pregnant night one sleeping in a manger would see his future in a vision.—Country Life in America.

The Cold Shoulder.
 At a reception in Washington some time ago one of the guests, a man with a poor memory for faces and, in addition, a little nearsighted, took the host and spoke to him in a confidential whisper.
 "You see that tall man standing by the door?" he asked.
 "Yes."
 "Well, I was talking to him awhile ago about the terribly cold weather in Nebraska last year, and he yawned in my face."
 The host smiled. "Don't you know who he is?" he asked.
 "No."
 "That's Lieutenant Peary, the arctic explorer."—Harper's Weekly.

Bishop McCabe.
 Bishop Charles C. McCabe has long been a famous man in the Methodist church. He is a fighter and has crossed swords on many occasions with such men as Dr. Buckley on matters of church policy. As a young man he was chaplain of the One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio Infantry during the civil war. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Winchester and spent four months in Libby prison. In 1868 he became agent for the Church Extension society and made a tremendous record by traveling all over the country organizing churches. As secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary society he called for "a million for missions" and then set out to get it. He visited church after church and by ringing appeals drew money and worshippers to him. In 1866 he was elected bishop. Though now seventy years old, his faculties are unimpaired.—M. A. P. in America.

MRS. NICKLEBY'S GARDEN. Estate at Bow, Where Dickens Laid One of His Famous Scenes.

Many interesting associations are linked with the Grove Hall estate, at Bow, which recently came under the auctioneer's hammer. It was here that Charles Dickens laid the scenes of the amusing love-making episodes between Mrs. Nicholas Nickleby and the "gentleman belonging to the house next door." Here stood the "little cottage at Bow," and the quaint old garden in which Mrs. Nickleby and her daughter Kate received the love offerings of vegetable marrow, cucumbers and onions is still in existence.
 Until recently the estate was the site of Bryas' private lunatic asylum. Just off the Bow road—the high road to Chigwell, with which the novelist was well acquainted—and about three or four hundred yards down Fairfield road the visitor comes to a large high brick wall. Passing through the narrow porter's lodge, he at once steps into an old world garden of quaint and singular beauty. In front of him stretches a long avenue of plane trees, and away in the distance are vistas of winding paths and leafy lanes.

It is a strange spot, situated in the heart of London's east end, a spot which few would expect to find in this busy district. At the end of the avenue and away to the left lies the old time garden in which the eccentric lady and her still more eccentric lover commuted in the days of long ago. The old wall, thickly covered with ivy and creepers, over which the "gentleman from next door" conversed with Mrs. Nickleby, is still there, much worn with age. In the center of the garden is a large patch of evergreens and magnolias, while sweet smelling jacinths perfume the air with its fragrance. One can easily reconstruct the love scene in the old fashioned corner and see in imagination the lady demurely rejecting the proposals of the madman "from next door."
 The little cottage has long since been demolished, and on its site now stand the remains of a laundry. But the landmarks are still left, and it will be a pity if these old associations are allowed to be obliterated by the march of the builder. It is a delightful sylvan retreat, and the many lovers of Dickens will hope that the suggestion of the Dickens Fellowship that the authorities should secure the place as a public recreation ground will be acted upon. The estate, which is still surrounded by the high wall of Bryas' private lunatic asylum, comprises close upon a dozen acres of beautifully wooded land. Such a spot would make an ideal recreation ground.

A School For Washermen.
 A comparatively new feature established by the charities organization in New York is the school for the promotion of the art of washing. This trade school for that it is—occupies two floors and a large, clear roof. There are none of the newfangled contrivances of a modern laundry, but just plain tubs and plenty of soap and water. The school has been established for two purposes—that of supplying a crying need of good laundresses and to aid women who must work, but who lack ability to do any one thing well. Women who have little children depending upon them for support find this school a greater blessing than an outsider would believe, for while they are learning they are paid from 60 cents to $1.50 a day for their work, and when they are competent to handle the finest pieces they double and treble that sum. The majority of women know how to wash, but few know how to iron, for it is easy to tear the fine ruffs and to iron the tucks the wrong way. Several graduates from this laundry school started small hand laundries of their own.—Leads' Weekly.

The Sea's Gold.
 "The Curies extracted their radium from pitchblende," said a scientist, "and there is much less radium in pitchblende than there is gold in the sea. Why, then, shouldn't the sea's inexhaustible gold supply be wrested from the waves?
 "A Baptist minister came near enriching himself with an electrical process for drawing the gold from the sea. He formed a company with a capital of $50,000 and put up a plant to deal with 40,000 tons of water a day, expecting therefrom a weekly net profit of $10,000.
 "But unfortunately, though every ton of sea water yielded 2 cents worth of gold, the expense of extracting the gold was a little over 2 cents for every ton. Had it been a little under—untold wealth. But it was a little over."
 "We laugh at the idea of extracting gold from sea water, just as we'd have laughed ten years ago at the idea of extracting from pitchblende such a marvelous substance as radium, but I am sure the day will come when sea water will yield up its radium in paying quantities, and a few wise investors will be unimaginably enriched."

Beyond the Pale.
 A friend of James Whitcomb Riley tells of an occasion when the humorist, who is, as a rule, extremely averse to social functions, was induced to attend a "Hierary" dinner in Indianapolis given in honor of a novelist of that city.
 Riley had been told off to take in to dinner the sister of his host, an excellent woman, though anything but "literary."
 The conversation touching upon the beauties of Chaucer, about whom a certain set of the city was then cultivating a fad, a spirited discussion ensued, during which the bewildered sister caught from time to time only the name "Chaucer."
 At last she whispered to Riley: "Who is this Mr. Chaucer they're talking about so much? Is he very popular in society?"
 "Madam," solemnly responded Riley, "that man did something that forever shuts him out of society."
 "Heavens!" exclaimed the worthy dame. "And what was that?"
 "He died several hundred years ago," said Riley.—Harper's Weekly.

Waiting Mice.
 Waltzing mice come from Japan. They are little mice, sometimes black, and white, sometimes brown and white, colored in patches like a calico horse. They are called waiting mice because under some conditions they keep perpetually going round and round. Place a pair of waltzing mice in a glass globe and put the globe in the light and the mice will go to sleep, but put the globe in a darker place and one or both of the mice will run round and round within it almost incessantly and with surprising speed. Waltzing mice sell for $1.00 a pair. They are bought to amuse children.—New York Sun.

A DESERTED VILLAGE. It Cost a Million and Now Stands In Ruins.

Hidden behind the precipitous rocky bluffs of Point Mainland, on the north shore of Lake Superior, lies the once thriving village of Mainland, long a deserted town of former comfortable homes and well paved streets. It stands in the midst of a thick wood, and except for the occasional hunter or prospector it is never visited. It has some fifty dwelling houses, besides other buildings, nearly all constructed of fine white pine, and a shaft house, stamp mill and reduction works.
 Near the site of this deserted town is an old and abandoned copper mine, the attempt to open which explains the existence of the village, the last remaining vestige of an English corporation, backed by a mint of money. The outcroppings of mineral were rich, and on the strength of this showing, even before the shaft was started that was to open the supposed copper deposit, the corporation built its town and stamp mill and reduction works.
 More than a million dollars were expended in this way, and at one time there were more than 200 men on the payroll. Money was spent lavishly. Long and beautiful drives were laid out in the virgin forest, and a steamer line was established between the town and Sault Ste. Marie. But copper was lacking, and the enterprise failed, to the dead loss of the stockholders.
 The corporation was called the Quebec-Lake Superior Copper Mining company. Operations were conducted for several years and in 1884 were suspended indefinitely, since which time the town has been abandoned to weeds and brush and the buildings remain standing, denuded of doors and windows and open to the snows and rains.
 It was not expected by the last group of people that departed from the place that the village would be deserted. In fact, the majority of the houses were left furnished and the big general store well stocked with goods. For a time watchmen were employed to protect the property against thieves, but finally they, too, were recalled, and all was abandoned to its fate.
 As soon as it was discovered that no ore was left to take care of the mill, shops, store and houses, a systematic exploration was organized, and plunder from the town was taken away by the boat load.
 The mining claim, together with the entire tract of land, comprising 6,100 acres, was subsequently acquired by W. H. Plummer of the Canadian Soo in liquidation of a claim of some thousands of dollars.
 The main street of the town is a mile in length. A remarkable fact in connection with the houses is that, although never painted, they today look almost like new buildings. The quality of the lumber probably is responsible for this. The plaster, too, remains white and clean, uncracked by frost or rain. There is not one among them that is not quite as cleanly as the ordinary tenement house in the cities.—Chicago Inter Ocean.
