On the famous Pikes Peak Cog Railway in Colorado, the steep grades of the mountain necessitate the use of cog wheels to control the train, and vibration often so injures ordinary watches that an expert repairman must readjust them.

A conductor on the Pikes Peak road made a ninety-day test of the South Bend Watch last Summer. No adjustment of the watch was made for the whole period, but at the end of the test, examination showed a variation of less than one-half second per day. Do you think the watch you carry could stand a test like this?

We will be pleased to show you our line of these watches at any time.

A NOTORIOUS RASCAL

Bold Exploits of Colonel Thomas Blood in England.

TRIED TO STEAL THE CROWN

The Daring Scamp Almost Succeeded, Too, and Managed to Escape Punishment After Being Captured—His Attack on the Duke of Ormonde.

A daring, fearless scamp and one of the most reckless and brazen soldiers of fortune that ever cut a swath in England was the notorious Colonel Thomas Blood.

This choicest of seventeenth century scoundrels was born probably in Ireland in or about 1618. During the civil war he was active on the parliamentary side, was made a justice of the peace by Henry Cromwell and received large grants of land. These were confiscated at the restoration, and Blood forthwith began his career as a desperado.

His first plot was to seize Dublin castle and the person of the Duke of Ormonde, the lord lieutenant, in 1683. A crowd was to be collected at the castle gates, a pretended baker with a load of bread upon his shoulder was to stumble and upset the loaves, and in the scramble which would probably ensue among the castle guards the gates were to be seized, but the plot was betrayed to Ormonde, and although Blood himself escaped, his brother-in-law was arrested and executed.

After a period of seclusion among the Irish hills and in Holland, Blood crossed to England and joined the fifty minor nobles who were plotting to murder the king. He was planned and nearly carried out a desperate stroke in 1670. In that year the Prince of Orange visited England and was entertained by the city of London. In his train on the occasion was the Duke of Ormonde, against whom Blood nursed his deadly hate. "The duke was dragged from his coach in St. James street by Blood and his son-in-law, strapped on horseback to one of the conspirators and hurried toward Tyburn. He determined was the prime mover in the affair that his enemy should die that he hurried on toward the gallows to arrange the rope. The duke's coachman gave the alarm, and followed his master with assistance, and a timely rescue was effected.

On May 9 in the following year Blood made his great attempt to carry off the Tower jewels. He set about the task in quite a modern style. Some three weeks before the attempt he and a woman whom he represented as his wife—his real wife being then in the north of England—visited the Tower, where the lady followed a sudden illness. She and her companion were invited into the private apartments of Edwards, the aged keeper, that she might rest and recover.

Three or four days later they returned with a present of gloves as an acknowledgment of the civility. Blood was courteous itself, admitted everything, but especially Edwards' pretty daughter, and presently proposed a match between the young lady and his "nephew." This was agreed to, and the visitors at once dined with the family. Blood pronouncing an edifying grace. After dinner they were shown over the house. Blood managed to rid Edwards of a case of pistols by purchasing them for a friend, and it was arranged for inspection by his future bride at 7 o'clock on the morning of May 9.

Punctual to the day and hour, Blood appeared with three companions—Parrot, Hunt and Holloway. Each had a sword stick in his hand, a dagger in his belt and pistols in his pockets. Holloway remained outside to guard the door.

Blood, with a nice regard for the etiquette of the occasion, proposed that they should await the arrival of his wife before joining the ladies and that Edwards should show them the crown jewels to while away the time. The jewel room was entered and the door, as usual, closed. Edwards was at once attacked, gagged and bound, and an iron hook being even attached to his nose "that no sound might pass from him that way."

In spite of threats he struggled gallantly, was knocked down, stabbed and left for dead. Parrot put the globe in his loose breeches. Blood crushed it up the crown and thrust it beneath his cloak, while Hunt began to file the scepter in two before putting it in a bag.

At this moment, like a bolt from the blue, appeared Edwards' son, newly arrived from Flanders and eager to greet his family. He went first to his mother and sister, and the thieves slipped out, but Edwards, regaining consciousness, managed to give the alarm, and they were taken. Said Blood philosophically, "It was a bold attempt, but it was for a crown."

After this one imagines there would be short shrift for Colonel Blood, and we expect the march to Tyburn and an edifying "last speech." But he refused to plead guilty in private to the king and was admitted to an interview, got on the right side of the merry monarch, hinted at accomplices by the hundred who would avenger his death, was granted his forfeited estates and was thenceforward frequent in the presence chamber. Then he quarreled with his patron, Buckingham, and was cast in damages for slander on the duke. He died in 1680 and was buried in Tottenham chapel, but a "sham funeral" rumor being started, he was exhumed two days later and identified at an inquest.—London Globe.

Air is estimated to surround the earth to a depth of 120 to 200 miles.

Not Caught Yet.

The young clubman had been introduced to the beautiful Russian actress. He was charmed, entranced, and finally led her to the conservatory, where they might have a quiet minute to themselves.

"Pardon me," he said, "I did not quite catch your name."
"What is it that you did not do?" she asked in bewilderment. "Oh, your language is so strange. Do you want my name?"
"Yes; your own full name."
"Will you catch it this time?"
"I'll do my best."
"Well, it's Vera Federovna Kommissarskaya."

He muffed it.—Los Angeles Herald.

Longevity in Turkey.
Turkey's climate is productive of great longevity, or at least has that reputation. In Keul Baghicha (presumably in Turkey) there is said to be now living at the advanced age of 134 years a government bookbinder whose father was 142 years old when he died.

FEED ON POND LILIES.

Moose Are Exceedingly Fond of These Pretty Flowers.

At first thought it would appear impossible that such large, gaunt denizens of the forest as moose could in any way be interested in flowers. They are, however, exceedingly fond of all kinds of water lilies. Few people know that these flowers grow from thick snake-like root stocks which are so firmly attached to the bottom that the strongest man cannot loosen them. It is from these firmly moored root stocks that the much admired leaves and flowers strive toward the light.

A well known naturalist who studied the habits of the animals in northern Minnesota, where moose are more numerous than in any other part of the world, often found two or three big moose engaged in gathering their morning meals on the lake bottom. The great beasts would slowly stalk about in three or four feet of water, and often their heads would be under water for half a minute at a time, so that their backs would look like bowlders just protruding from the stream; and a pair of magnificent antlers would come up, and the water would be shaken out of the big ears with a flapping noise that could be heard for a quarter of a mile, and then the big, long muzzle would be leisurely clearing a dripping mouthful of water lily leaves and other plants gathered from the bottom.

So intent were the huge animals on gathering flowers that several times the naturalist could row up close enough to secure a good photograph before they splashed noisily back to the shore and disappeared in the black spruce. When the moose find a good lily pond they continue feeding in it until the plants are almost exterminated.—Minneapolis Journal.

A KING'S DREAM.

Belief in the Vision Might Have Changed History.

On June 12, 1645, Charles I. slept at the little inn in Naseby village. Scouts had brought news of the approach of the parliamentary army, and the king was resolved to fight the battle. In the middle of the night the lords of the bedchamber, who slept in the outer room, were disturbed by an extraordinary noise in the king's room. Upon entering they found Charles sitting bolt upright in his bed and in a much excited state.

On asking what the noise was, the king said he had heard no noise, but that their entry had roused him from an extraordinary dream. He said that Strafford had stood at the foot of his bed and implored him not to fight battle, for if he did he would be so disastrously defeated as to threaten his crown and even his life.

The next morning Charles told Prince Rupert and his generals of his dream, but declared that he would fight. They vainly tried to dissuade him. In the evening news arrived that the enemy were close at hand. That night Charles again dreamed the same dream. Strafford warned him that it was the last time he would try to help him.

The next morning the king led his army out and by sunset he had lost cannon, baggage and four-fifths of his troops and, as events proved, the war as well.

Strafford's ghost was right. Had Charles not met Cromwell at Naseby it is quite likely he would not have met his death at Whitehall.

HARBOR BUOYS.

Their Different Colors Serve as Guides to the Mariner.

If you examine the buoys on entering any harbor in the world, you will find that those on your right bank are painted red and those on your left black. If you should see one painted in red and black horizontal bands, the ship should run as close to it as possible, because that indicates the center of a narrow channel. Buoys with red and black vertical stripes always mark the end of spits and the outer and inner ends of extensive reefs where there is a channel on each side. When red and black checkers are painted on a buoy it marks either a rock in the open sea or an obstruction in the harbor of small extent, with channel all round.

If there are two such obstructions and a channel between them, the buoy on the right of you will have red and red checkers and the one on your left will have black and white checkers. When a wreck obstructs the channel, a green buoy will be placed on the sea side of the wreck, with the "Wreck" plainly painted on it in white letters, provided there is a clear channel all around it; otherwise an even number will be painted in white above the word "Wreck" when the buoy is on the right side of the channel and an odd number if the buoy is on the left.—Pearson's Weekly.

TRICKY JAIL BIRDS.

Many Ways the Convicts Have of Feigning Sickness.

"Hear the song of the dear little jail birds," said the jailer as a burst of ribald melody came down the gray corridor. "The dear little jail birds!" He shook his head and sighed.

"They are all playing sick in that ward," he resumed. "There's nobody can mangle like a jail bird. His tricks are amazing."
"To fake a fever he will whiten his tongue with chalk, flush his cheeks with a red flannel undershirt and disorder his stomach by swallowing a quid of tobacco."

"To fake consumption he will cut his gums so as to spit blood and go through a terrific kind of Swedish movement in bed so as to produce night sweats."
"Some jail birds have brought on nettle rash by temporarily poisoning themselves with smuggled crab or lobster. Some chew soap so as to froth at the mouth in fake fits. Some even thrust needles down to the lids of the eye to bring on cataract."—Minneapolis Journal.

A Bank of the Year 600 B. C.
The very earliest banking firm of which there is any record was that of Egibi & Sons, an institution which carried on an advance, exchange and general financial business in Babylon in the year 600 B. C. Knowledge of this firm is obtained from certain records on clay tablets which have been found in recent excavations made by a party of English and French archaeologists near the site of the ancient city above mentioned. Bills of credit, drafts, etc., in the form of small burnt clay tablets, each bearing the characteristic signature of Egibi & Sons, have been found in many other parts of Asia Minor, and it is believed that close study will prove that some of the clay tablets found in tombs and pyramids in Egypt will finally prove to be Egibi "negotiable notes."

DUELING STORIES.

Girardin's Satisfaction and a Winning Choice of Weapons.

M. de Girardin, the father of the statesman and author, Emile de Girardin, on one occasion entered a place where several men were engaged at a target. A gentleman present, whom M. de Girardin did not know, hit the bulls-eye at every shot. Several bystanders expressed themselves in very great admiration of the gentleman's precision.

"Yes," said De Girardin, "he shoots remarkably well, but it's quite a different thing to hit a man in a duel from hitting a piece of pasteboard."
The marksman overheard the remark and was offended.

"I think you are mistaken, sir," he said to De Girardin. "I assure you that if I had you before me I shouldn't miss you."
"You can have me when you like," said De Girardin.

"Let it be immediately, then," said the marksman. "An attempt was made to patch the matter up, but neither man would agree to an amicable settlement. The seconds were chosen, and the men went to a locality favorable for the duel. It was decided that they should fight separately, and it was left to a decision by lot which fired first.

The lot fell to the mysterious marksman. He fired at M. de Girardin and missed him. De Girardin stood still, making no sign as if to fire at his antagonist.

"Come, why don't you shoot?" asked his seconds.
"Why should I shoot?" asked De Girardin. "There is no reason why I should kill this gentleman. I maintained that even a crack shot could easily miss his man at twenty-five paces. This gentleman maintained the contrary. He must now be convinced that he is wrong. I owe him no ill will for having discovered that."

A better method of meeting a dueling challenge was no doubt that one which was employed on a certain occasion by a French statesman against M. Victor Noir, an illiterate bully of the press in the time of the second empire. The statesman received from Noir, for no real reason whatever, a challenge to fight a duel.

Noir was a densely ignorant man, and nearly every word in the challenge was misspelt. The statesman responded with the following letter:
"Dear Sir—You have called me out without any good reason. I have therefore the choice of weapons. I choose the spelling book, and you are a dead man."
The duel was never fought.—London Tit-Bits.

POISONING AS A FINE ART.

Scale of Prices Submitted to the Venetian Council of Ten.

Venetian poisoners first came into notoriety in the fifteenth century. At that period the mania for poisoning had risen to such a height that the governments of the states were formally recognizing secret assassination by poison and considering the removal of emperors, princes and powerful nobles by this method.

The notorious council of ten met to consider such plans, and an account and record of their proceedings still exists, giving the number of those who voted for and who voted against the proposed removal, the reasons for the assassination and the sum to be paid for its execution.

Thus these conspirators quietly arranged to take the lives of many prominent individuals, and when the deed was executed it was registered on the margin of their official record by the significant word "factum."
On Dec. 15, 1543, John of Ragusa offered the council a selection of poisons and declared himself ready to remove any person whom they deemed objectionable out of the way. He calmly stated his terms, which for the first successful case were to be a pension of 1,500 ducats a year, to be increased on the execution of further services.

The presidents Guolando Duoda and Pietro Gulardi placed this matter before the council on Jan. 4, 1544, and on a division it was resolved to accept this patriotic offer and to experiment first on the Emperor's Maximilian, John, who had evidently reduced poisoning to a fine art, submitted afterward a regular graduated tariff to the council. The highest fee was for poisoning the sultan, 500 ducats; for the king of Spain, 150 ducats, including the expenses of the journey; for the Duke of Milan, 60 ducats; for the Marquis of Mantua, 50 ducats; for the pope, 120 ducats.—Health.

New Light on the Zones.

A class of boys averaging about twelve years of age had been examined in geography, which had been preceded the day before by grammar. Among the questions in the geography paper was the following:
"Name the zones."
One promising youth of eleven years wrote this answer:
"There are two zones, masculine and feminine. The masculine is either temperate or intertempe; the feminine is either torrid or frigid."—New York Sun.

Then He Subsided.
"I never saw such a woman in all my life," said Bass. "You are never satisfied with anything."
"People who know the man I took for a husband," replied Mrs. B., "think, on the contrary, that I am easily satisfied."—Liverpool Mercury.

Copper Mirrors.
Notwithstanding many efforts, including those of Faraday fifty years ago, to obtain mirrors coated with copper instead of the material commonly used for the film, no great success has been attained until recently. Now it is claimed that a process invented by F. D. Chattaway successfully solves the problem of producing mirrors with a film of metallic copper which gives as brilliant reflection as that from a silver mirror. The use of this process for coating glass with thin layers of copper to be used for other purposes than those of mirrors is anticipated.

Literature of Japan.
Japan has never produced a Shakespeare or a Milton, a Goethe or a Humboldt, a Montaigne or an Emerson, a Gibbon or a Montaigne, but despite this fact it has a very respectable literature in all of its various branches—history, poetry, geography, art, science and the novel. Education is quite universal throughout the empire and within the past thirty or forty years the national literature has grown immensely.—New York American.
