EDITORIAL

government it believes most promotive of its own happiness; consequently, to accommodate to the circumstances in which it finds itself, that received from its predecessors; and it is for the peace and good of mankind that a solemn opportunity of doing this every nineteen or twenty years should be provided by the constitution; so that it may be handed on, with periodical repairs, from generation to generation, to the end of time, if anything human can so long endure.

Jay Cooke's Simplicity.

Although money came to him in large amounts, it can be truthfully said of Jay Cooke that he did not care for riches on his own account. His tastes were of the simplest. In travel, dress, horses, yachts, fine foods or social display he had no personal interest. His own delight was to betake himself to some of nature's open spaces, where he might cast aside convention, don a pair of cowhide boots, an old suit of clothes and shoot or fish from dawn until sunset. What was showy in his life was in answer to no selfish need of his own, but a natural impulse, which he indulged as his prosperity increased, to dispense good, simple, honest human cheer.—Dr. Oberholzer in Century.
