SWEET POTATOES

We make no apology for writing on this homely topic. While the government is sending to the end of the earth to collect rare and valuable seeds and plants, which is all well enough, yet it is often true that we overlook our greatest source of wealth right at home in the products we have known all our lives. Though it is cultivated everywhere and raised in comparative abundance among us who are of the opinion that the great value of the sweet potato crop in the Southern States isn't sufficiently appreciated, Sweet potatoes are not always more prolific than grain crops. They exhaust the land less and give more in return for the labor and fertilizer expended. Of course they are not so numerous as grain, pound for pound, but in their great bulk they yield more nutriment to a given area of land than do the cereals.

Irish potatoes, turnips, beets, carrots, both in Europe and in our Northern States, are justly prized as the most valuable of all the farm crops. Grain crops generally do best in the temperate climates, where their concentrated nutriment is needed by the more robust inhabitants; but in the semi-tropical regions, where the people need less strong food, it seems to be a provision of nature that man should seek a greater proportion of his supplies in tuberous crops. This is especially true in Florida, where our hot clim to makes roots a more successful staple than grain. The sweet potato is superior to all roots above named. Even the Irish potato as food for man and beast. It may be used for all purposes to which they are applied and to many others besides. In the first stage, when just out of the ground it makes an excellent substitute for arrowroot, by grating the root into water and allowing the starchy matter to settle.

As a vegetable, it is a favorite on every table cooked in a great variety of ways. As a dessert it makes a better pudding or pie than the universal pumpkin of the North. We knew an old planter once, who always raised an abundance of corn and other grain and forage for his stock, yet was an enthusiast over the sweet potato crop estimating it on the yield returned from the labor bestowed on it is of more value than any other food-producing crop.

It is strange that our best Southern varieties have not become an important article of shipment to the Northern markets. Our farmers for years have been complaining that with an immense crop of the favorite yellow or sugar yam, raised in expectation of shipment, there is no demand in the Northern market for this variety, the northern people preferring the dry tasteless Nansmond.

We have noticed this thing for some time, with a little surprise, for it is a fact that when Northern people come down to Florida and try them a few times, they come to like our rich syrupy potatoes. In view of this fact we have always believed that if a demand could once be established in any Northern city, the demand would become general, as it is for the orange. They call for the dry mealy potato because they know no other. There is no possibility of raising oranges up there, hence they must have ours. We believe that the Southern sweet potato might be made to penetrate the North as well as the Irish potato does the South, leaving this and the apple as the characteristic product of that section as the orange and yam are of this section.

A contemporary in referring to this perverse appetite of the Northern people, says it is because they do not know how to cook them properly, and adds: "A well-seasoned yam baked slowly as it should be, is really more of a fruit than a vegetable. The time will come when they will be prepared in this way and by being put in sealed cans, will become an important article of shipment to the north as well as to the markets of Europe." They are already being put up in cans in some parts of the country.

By the government analysis, white potatoes contain water, 78 per cent; protein, 2.2 per cent; carbohydrates, 1.48 per cent and have a fuel value (that is, life-sustaining power) of 355 calories per pound. Sweet potatoes water 69 per cent; protein, 1.8; carbohydrates, 49.1, and, have a fuel value of 570 calories per pound. That is, sweet potatoes are worth over fifty per cent, more than white potatoes for sustaining life.—San Mateo Item.

Lingering La Grippe Cough

G. Vacher, 157 Ogden street, Chicago, says: "My wife had a very severe case of lagrippe and it left her with a very bad cough. She tried a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it gave immediate relief. A 50 cent bottle cured her cough entirely." Price 25c. and 50c.
