The next freight carries an express car and the car is loaded at the various depots and then drops it to be picked up by the passenger train next morning.

This community has doubtfully the laziest and most shiftless specimen of humanity that ever bathed the air of God's green earth. I have reference to a man living about two miles north of Kingston. He is loitering for work and probably praying that he cannot find it, in-as-much as a man can hardly walk down the street without stumbling over work. He repeats a tale of poverty to everyone he meets and makes the sympathy-provoking assertion that he has had but one biscuit to appease the appetite of his family for three days. One lady has offered to give him a loaf of bread each day but it seems he is too lazy to go after it. This man's name is Holden, and a visit to Judge Stewart's Court on the charge of vagrancy would no doubt do such to increase his energy.
