Those "Ads".

Occasionally an editor hears of a subscriber having his beatific temper dislocated because the family newspaper carries "patent medicine" ads. This dislocation should never be allowed. These ads. are not carried solely for the money "in it." "Lest we forget," is the motto of the editor, and he is constantly reminding his readers where they may find a cure or a relief in cases of emergencies. Of course he gets a little pay for doing it; that's better than doing it; for nothing. And when he hears of a very dear subscriber, who by-the-way owes five years subscription, through the efficacy of an advertised "patent medicine," getting up sound as a dollar from a bedful of bellyache, the editor's joy is enough to make an angel envious. The bachelor editor of the St. Johns Herald would strive to have his readers emulate his own modest endeavors to treat the "patent medicine" ad. as considerately as a prescription written by Esculapius himself, for in many cases of emergencies recourse is had to the "patente medicines" which a provident hand has provided. However remote the possibility of having need of the medicine advertised may be, treat the ad. courteously, as his suggestion. Many a time has the editor read an intensely interesting editorial in his favorite exchange down to the end of the column and turned to the head of the next column to continue, only, out to be confronted with these words: "For Sore Nipples." Naturally, one would suppose that the editor of Apache County's family newspaper would be greatly angered; would upset the paste pot, cuss the exchange, kick a hole in the office towel, and paint the atmosphere blue with profanity generally, so far remote would be the idea of his ever needing such remedy. But not so. Again he would say, Treat the "patent medicine" ad. with due christain respect, for you don't know when the "evil day" will come.

Secretary Root's declaration that Mr. Taft is "one of the biggest men in the world" will have to stand unchallenged until some one else can get up in a crowded street car and offer his seat to four ladies.

Just about the time Senator Tillman has developed into a real Senator, the country has to begin licking Jeff Davis into proper shape.

Pa Twaddles—Why are you spanking Tommy?

Ma Twaddles—He needs a lesson and I'm impressing it on his mind.

Pa Twaddles—Well, you've got a blamed queer idea as to where the lad's mind is situated—Cleveland Leader.
