A CANINE HERO.

The Story of Scotch, an Obedient and Loyal Dog.

A most interesting as well as a most pathetic dog story is related by Enos A. Mills in his book, "Wild Life on the Rockies." Mr. Mills and his dog Scotch were on a four days' tramp on the summit of a desolate and lofty range far above the timber line, and Mr. Mills stopped to take some photographs. The work required that he should remove his sheepskin mittens, which he placed in his coat pocket. The story follows:

From time to time as I climbed the summit of the continental divide I stopped to take photographs, but on the summit the cold nipped my silk gloves, and I felt for my mittens, to find that one of them was lost.

I stopped, put an arm around Scotch and told him I had lost a mitten and that I wanted him to go down for it to save me trouble.

Instead of starting off willingly, as he had invariably done before in obedience to my commands, he stood still. I thought he had misunderstood me, so I patted him and then, pointing down the slope, said: "Go for the mitten, Scotch. I will wait here for you."

He started for it, but went unwillingly. He had always served me so cheerfully that I could not understand, and it was not until late the next afternoon that I realized that he had not understood me, but that he had loyally and at the risk of his life tried to obey me.

My cabin, eighteen miles away, was the nearest house, and the region was utterly wild. I waited a reasonable time for Scotch to return, but he did not come back. As it was late in the afternoon and growing colder, I decided to go on toward my cabin along a route that I felt sure he would follow, and I reasoned that he would overtake me.

When at midnight he had not come I felt something was wrong. I slept two hours and decided to go to meet him. The thermometer showed fourteen below zero. I kept on going, and at 2 in the afternoon, twenty-four hours after I had sent Scotch back, I paused on a crag and looked below. There in the snowy world of white he lay by the mitten in the snow. He had misunderstood me and had gone back to guard the mitten instead of to get it.

After waiting for him to eat a meal, we started merrily toward the valley where we arrived at 1 o'clock in the morning.

But I had returned I found Scotch had had a cold, and he was unable to go without food and had to lay down by the tent. I understood that I told of in the annals of dog heroism know of no greater deed.

An Irrelevant Remark.

She was slender and very pretty child, the belle of the class and the object of many a heart flutter. In the course of a morning she was on a few days previous to the opening of school that the teacher asked her if she could define an irrelevant remark.

"I can't just define it," she answered. "But I can give an example."

"Very well, give the example, please."

"Well, if I should be going through a dark hall and should meet Will White, and he should ask me the time, and I should say, 'My, but your nose is cold!' that would be an irrelevant remark."—New York Sun.

The Alligator and the Boots.

Here is a story of a disappointed alligator:

"The fisherman was fast asleep on the river bank when the alligator crawled up and tried to swallow him, but only succeeded in swallowing his boots, in which were so many snakes that the gator turned from the river and took to the woods, where in a vain effort to climb a tree he was shot by a nature faker and sold to a college museum as a hitherto unheard of specimen of the saurian family."—Atlanta Constitution.
