THE U. OF A. GETS NOTED ARCHAEOLOGIST

Special to the Yuma Daily Examiner) TUCSON, July 20.—Professor Byron Cummings, who has made a reputation by reason of his explorations among the cliff dwellings of northern Arizona has been secured as dean of the new school or archaeology to be opened at the University of Arizona. Prof. Cummings completed his work at the University of Utah last week and is now on his way to Arizona. He will not come directly to Tucson but will spend the summer collecting material from the ruins of the cliff dwellers habitations with which to start a museum at the state institution.

Other explorers have gone into this territory and taken away relics, but with only a vague idea of what the articles represented and practically no information as to the development of the early inhabitants. Some savants, however, worked out a theory which made the Hopis the descendants of the ancient cliff dwellers. Dean Cummings went further; he studied the Navajos and from many of the myths, ceremonies, manners and customs arrived at the conclusion that the Navajos as well as the Hopis are descendants of the ancient people. He found that the ceremonies and myths of both modern tribes were, in many respects similar.

Eastern savants took violent exception to the Navajo theory when he read a paper on the subject last winter before the American Archaeological Society at Philadelphia. Dean Cummings clings firmly to his belief and before the summer is gone hopes to establish his theory beyond question.

Dean Cummings gained aid from the state of Utah to make his explorations into the Utah-Arizona archaeological fields. The first expedition was in 1906. Relics collected on this and subsequent trips have made the museum at the University of Utah one of the most complete on American archaeology.

In addition to purely archaeological researches, he has spent time among the Hopis and Navajos for the purpose of throwing light on his investigations by study of their customs and myths.

His resignation as dean of the school of arts and sciences of the University of Utah was on account of the dispute of the faculty with the regents of the institution as to academic freedom.

The dean was born in Westville, N. Y., September 20, 1861. He went to the University of Utah in 1893 as instructor in Greek and Latin.

George Schutz was a visitor today from the country below Somerton.

Our old friend, "Bill" Timmons is on his feet again, and the "blind pig" is locked up.

H. C. Hallmark, assistant general freight and passenger agent of the Southern Pacific company, with offices at Tucson, is here today on business.
