Refreshments for Children's Parties

"I don't think I shall ever allow Johnnie to go to another party," complained the mother of a sturdy six-year-old. "Every time he goes to one he eats a lot of things he shouldn't and his stomach is out of order for a week afterwards."

And isn't it true? Why will mothers persist in filling youngsters up with rich cakes and candies and many other unsuitable things just because one of the children happens to have a birthday party?

There are many good things, however that may be served at children's parties which are not harmful. Sponge cake, ginger bread and simple cookies are better than rich cakes. Instead of cream and candies and bon bons have stick candy, small hard candies, peppermint drops or rock candy—or better than candy, dates and figs. For the very small children milk is the only beverage which may be served, but the older ones may have cocoa or fruit lemonade. When two and three year olds are entertained, it is safest to serve only milk and a variety of sweet crackers, but for older children the menu may be more varied. Any of the following menu is suitable:

1. Cream of chicken soup, wafers, bread and butter sandwiches, vanilla ice cream served in half cantaloupe.
2. Boylston sandwiches, lettuce sandwiches, hard boiled eggs, grape juice lemonade, prune whip, angel food cake.
3. Chicken cream sandwiches, cocoa, apple and date meringues, lady fingers.
4. Quince honey sandwiches, egg sandwiches, cocoa, orange ice, sponge cake.

5. Fruit salad, graham and butter sandwiches, tapioca cream, ginger-bread men and animals.—Josephine Bessema in the July Mother's Magazine.

The New Poetic Manner

Whenever the average man thinks of the new poetry, he thinks chiefly of the new, unrhymed and irregular-lined forms which are now so commonly printed, either seriously or by way of parody, in magazines and newspapers. Let it be said immediately that these forms are not in themselves the new poetry. We would not say that a multigraph machine, or any other machine represented a new manner of doing something, is in itself the new business. What is new is the modern state of mind which recognizes the usefulness of the multigraph machine. The machine and the mind co-exist. The machine would hardly be of value to the mind which did not understand its value. Now the new manner of doing so much (real or alleged) modern poetry has no value whatever unless there is beneath it a new state of mind, of which it is the expression.—"The New Poetry—and Miss Amy Lowell," by Richard Hunt in National Magazine for September.

A Good Man "But He Speculates"

A writer in the September Woman's Home Companion tells of the dangers of stock speculation and why he regrets that he ever began to bet on stocks. He says:

"I have held two other positions since, and am now paid $80 a week. My college roommate, who started at the same salary as I, and with no better prospects, receives two hundred dollars. In each position I have done excellent work. My employers have praised me; they have given me difficult commissions; and yet I have had to sit by and see other, and less able men, promoted over my head. My bosses have never explained this to me. I have been to proud to ask for an explanation. Indeed, it is not necessary. I know.

"Wherever I have gone, the damning whisper has followed me: 'A good man, but look out for him; he speculates.' I have had my employers' regard, but never their confidence. That too, is a part of the price I have paid for being a piker."

This Caterer Has Millions of Customers.

The October American Magazine says:

"In common ordinary business parlance Harry Stevens is a caterer, only not another one in the world has so many customers. Probably he has kept more crowds in good humor than any other man in the country, for baseball is not the only source of his income. But Baseball is the big source. He got his start in baseball and he has stuck to it. And what pleasure is there watching a game if you have to sit on a hard seat without a good cigar or bottle of pop on a hot day, or peanuts to munch of a score card to keep you busy? Ten thousand dyed-in-the-wool fans answer with one voice. "Give us our pop! Give us our peanuts!" And Harry Stevens gives them all they want as long as the nickles and dimes are ready."

According to a British chemist tobacco ashes contain 20 per cent of potash.

BARD NEWS.

Mrs. Haughtelin and Mrs. Kenneth Sawyer returned Monday from the coast. Dean Haughtelin went on through Yuma to Tucson to continue his course at the state university.

Mrs. Nelson and little daughter have returned from Los Angeles, where they have been visiting friends for several weeks.

Mrs. Jesse Miller of Los Angeles is a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Magoon, and will remain for several weeks.

Mr. Gall, representing the department of agriculture is at the Bard experimental station arranging with Mr. Blair for a collection of exhibits to be displayed at the irrigation congress.

The Bard Woman's Club held their first official meeting Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Irving York. The club president, Mrs. Blair, in greeting the members, made a short address appropriate to the occasion and filled with words of welcome and inspiration. Mrs. Guthrie had the program in charge, and read a paper upon the topic chosen for the day, "California Laws Pertaining to Women and Children." The subject was thoroughly and ably handled and interestingly presented, discussion following. Mrs. McBride sang a vocal solo. Miss Nicot recited, "Columbus," by Joaquin Miller, and Mrs. Sawyer played a piano solo. The program was enjoyed by all, and the members feel that the club is now successfully launched for the season.

Mrs. Miller, member of the Friday Morning Club, one of the largest and oldest clubs in Los Angeles, was a guest of the afternoon and responded to a request to speak. She has a charming personality, and her remarks were very gracious and complimentary to the club. During the business session it was decided to accept the invitation received from committee to have the club represented at the county fair to be held in Yuma next month.

The members in attendance were Mesdames Blair, Guthrie, Yorke, Killian, McBride, Magoon, Fisher, Sawyer Haughtelin, Mayo, Sexsmith, Peterson, Braun, Misses Nice and Killian.

SCISSORS PIERCE CHILD'S HEART.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 6.—A pair of scissors pierced the heart of Mary Gaughan, 11 years old, of 515 Bloyd street, Germantown, when she fell down a short flight of stone steps while at play near her home. The child died instantly.

Mary, accompanied by several playmates, had been playing "house" on the steps of an empty dwelling at 5604 Bloyd street.

The children, some of whom were dressed in their mother's clothes, had arranged their dolls and dishes on the top step, while they cut paper dresses and skirts. One by one they had gone to their homes, until only Mary and her two friends remained.

According to the girls, Mary suggested that they end the day's play and go home. Accordingly she picked up her dolls and the scissors and started down the steps. Something attracted her attention in the street and she tripped over a small broom.

The scissors, which were about four inches long, had been turned against her breast.
