HALIFAX HORROR STUNS DOMINION

Disaster Probably Most Fearful That Has Occurred in the American Continent.

TOTAL LOSS OF LIFE UNKNOWN

Inch Smaller than Number of British or British-American Fighting Men in the World, the City of Halifax, Nova Scotia, was almost completely destroyed in a man-made disaster. The explosion occurred during the operation of a munitions factory, and the resulting fire and flames engulfed the entire city. The death toll is estimated to be thousands, but the precise number will never be known.

GREAT LOST OF LIFE

The explosion was caused by a German bomb that had been planted in the factory. The bomb was set to explode at a time when the factory was at its busiest, causing massive destruction. The factory was located near the harbor, and the explosion caused a huge fire that spread quickly to the surrounding buildings.

DEFENCE WORKERS

The factory was a defense plant, and the workers were all volunteers who had signed up to help with the war effort. Many of them were young men who had left their homes to work in the factory. The explosion claimed the lives of many of these brave men, and the families of those who died were left to mourn their loss.

RESCUE EFFORTS

Rescue efforts were launched immediately, with thousands of volunteers from across the country coming to help. The police and military were also present to help with the rescue efforts. Despite the best efforts of those involved, many lives were lost.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This article is based on information gathered from various sources, including official reports and news articles. The author wishes to express gratitude to those who have contributed to the understanding of this tragic event.