YOU'LL

SEE AN OIL DERRICK

Going up on our vast acreage in your valley, near Safford, within the next Three or Four Weeks

The Amalgamated Oil Company has enough faith in the indications in the Safford-Bowie District to go to the expense of putting up their equipment and will commence drilling for oil as soon as equipment arrives.

It takes money to drill for oil—We appreciate your response in money in helping us to get started on our drilling campaign. However, if you have as much faith in this valley as we have, you all should certainly be willing to help finance the drilling campaign. You will profit greatly if oil is struck, and we have every reason to believe it will be found.

The Amalgamated Oil Company is a strong home company, with many prominent local and Tucson men behind it. This Company now has holdings in eight different oil producing states.

Besides drilling in the Safford-Bowie District, the Amalgamated Oil Company will drill shortly on their holdings near the famous Bell Well in the Toyah-Pecos District, of Reeves County, Texas.

We want your support drilling in the Safford-Bowie District, and are willing to protect you with our active organization of experienced men.

Remember, YOU WIN, if we get a dry hole in the Safford-Bowie District, because you will share in the dividends derived from our other vast holdings.

We want to be the first to get big production in the Safford-Bowie Field. Our drill will show that we mean business.

YOUR DOLLARS WILL SHOW THAT YOU ARE INTERESTED IN DISCOVERING OIL IN THIS VALLEY.

WHITE CHIMNEYS

By DORA JONES

(Copyright, 1911, by the McClure New Paper Syndicate.)

Winifred had wired Baltimore as soon as she reached New York. If she lingered some of Leslie's friends were certain to recognize her and tell him, but she knew of one safe hiding place.

"Take Bel Air bungalow, Hartley Manor, Deep River. Three months." Her agent there would understand, she knew, and ask no questions. She took the night train down and reached Deep River about seven. It was a run of four miles to the shore of the Chesapeake, and there lay her hide-away. As she drove along the narrow, winding shore road the first glimpse of its white chimneys above the willows brought a sob of relief to her throat. It had been their honeymoon home, two years before, and already she longed to break the tie that bound her to Leslie Forbes.

A fire had been laid in the living room. She knelt before the blazing knots and spread her fingers to the warmth.

"Deed an' if Eph and me had jus' a know'n yo' was comin' we'd had all de comforts for yo', Miss Winnie." Aunt Dinorah watched her solicitously, her head on one side, as she sensed the trouble in every dejected line of the slender figure. "Ain't but a day since yo' was here, and Master Forbes."

Before Winifred realized the break in her nerves she was crying on the old colored woman's ample shoulder, and being petted as if she had been ten instead of twenty-two. After she

She had left on the evening train, without a word for him, with all of the unreasoning, heart-breaking misery and recklessness possible, and now the peace of White Chimneys unfolded her. She fell asleep in the porch hammock, her amber silk negligee cast aside for a little sport suit of pongee, her hair ruffled like a tired youngster's around her face.

It was here that Leslie found her. Worn from a sleepless night he came up the porch steps slowly and stood over her, hands clasped behind him, his gray eyes full of yearning and relief. Behind him ambled old Eph, his garden hat held between his hands anxiously, and Aunt Dinah shouted at him indignantly from the back of the house.

"Ain't got no sense, nevah did have, nevah 'spect yo' will have, ole man. Don't yo' know dey's makin' up?" But Winifred's eyes held no welcome when she awakened and sat up to find him there. Silently, unforgettingly, she listened to his explanation of how he had found her. It all seemed so simple, and she had thought she had covered her flight. Just tracing her to New York, he had called up the "Hotel Registry" and had located her at the Bellicent. There he had found she had sent the telegram to Baltimore and had followed to White Chimneys.

"Now tell me the exact meaning of this nonsense." He drew a porch chair close beside her and waited gravely. "I'm thankful you came here, anyway."

She lit her lip. "He simply wanted to call up the old memories of their happiness there and trade on her love for him. And now she told herself she did not love him, not even with him sitting there and gazing at her steadily."

"I wanted to give you back your freedom," she said slowly, one hand pushing back her hair. "It's all been such an awful mistake."

Leslie took her hands in his firmly. "Listen to me, dearest. I was wrong not to have told you perhaps, but that poor devil was in danger and I dared not."

"Mrs. Pomeroy" exclaimed Winifred. He laughed. "No, indeed, her younger brother Al. He's up at West Point, you know, and got into a pretty bad row there. Looked like suspension, but I've cleared the matter up, and I know he'll make good now. That package was his. He'd smuggled into his quarters a roulette outfit, just a kid trick, but I looked bad. He hid it with his sister, but I insisted on making a clean breast of it, and his facing the music. So she sent the stuff to me. I could hardly tell you until the thing was over. It meant everything to the boy not to get thrown out, and I had given her my word. By the way, she's to marry Major Roger, did you know it? The announcements were in the morning papers."

Winifred stared out at the water in dead silence. All of the misery of the past week, all of her own unreasoning folly in jumping to conclusions came over her, and slowly the tears gathered and fell down on her pongee dress. Leslie wiped them off gravely. "Rain always spots it, doesn't it?" he asked gravely. "Any chance for breakfast? I've come for a little vacation."

"Oh, you old dear," she cried, helplessly. "I wonder what made me do it. You said once women had no logic or deduction. Was that it?" Leslie laughed softly as he took her in his arms.

"Never mind the logic or deduction, honey," he whispered, "only next time just keep faith with me. Remember how we loved the old line. 'A little faith all undisproved?' Give me a chance before you take a train, won't you dear?"

"Some ole waffles and honey, children," said Aunt Dinorah, coming around the corner of the veranda with a large, tempting breakfast tray. "Ah, allers tote Eph you all would come back for a second honeymoon, and dar yo' is, bless you."

Winifred laughed with sheer relief, but Leslie was already at the waffles and the smoke from the new hearth fire curled out of White Chimneys.

Bugs That Walk on Water. Insects that walk on the water by means of pneumatic floats are the familiar spider and the pond skater. The pond skater really walks on pneumatic floats. There are tiny hairs on the feet of this insect, so fine that they cannot be seen, that are arranged to collect air. The amount collected in and about these hairs is sufficient to allow the insects to walk or float upon the surface of the water. As each foot is put down it forms a cup-like depression, or tiny pit, in the water. The foot does not sink because the air bubble that has been formed is too light to let it. A fine covering of hair protects the water spider, too, and even if it is submerged in the water it is never really wet; the hair keeps a layer of air between its body and the water. It looks like a white pearl when below the surface.

He Looks the Part

The above is a picture of Adam Brede, the author of "The Green Veil," a short serial we are going to print.

It is a story of a western mining camp, such as Adam Brede knows how to write. He is a part of the great West and has had his part in the stirring scenes that have marked its history. He is simply filled with the romance and adventure of the great open spaces, the mountains, and the rugged peoples of the mining camps, and it is of these that he is writing in "The Green Veil."
