Tell Others How They Were Carried Safely Through Change of Life.

Durand, Wis.—"I am the mother of fourteen children and I owe my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I was 45 and had the Change of Life, a friend recommended it and it gave me such relief from my bad feelings that I took several bottles. I am now well and healthy and recommend your Compound to other ladies."

—Mrs. MARY RIDGWAY, Durand, Wis. A Massachusetts Woman Writes: Blackstone, Mass.—"My troubles were from my age, and I felt awfully sick for three years. I had hot flashes often and frequently suffered from pains. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now am well."

—Mrs. PIERRE COURNOYER, Box 239, Blackstone, Mass. Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and dizziness, should be heeded by middle-aged women. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has carried many women safely through this crisis.

HOW CANADA AVOIDS STRIKES

Aggrieved Party Must Inform the Government of Settlement.

The Dominion of Canada has had for the last nine years what is known as an industrial disputes investigation act which has apparently worked admirably for the prevention of strikes and lockouts in industries designated as public utilities, or those in which the service affects the public generally and not alone the employees who are at odds over questions of wages, hours of labor and other conditions affecting their own interests, says the New York Journal of Commerce.

The legislation was occasioned at the beginning by a series of strikes in coal mines and on railroads which were the cause of much personal suffering and loss and much disturbance of business. Its scope was enlarged to include all transportation and communication operations and others falling under the general term of "public service utilities."

There had been a conciliation act based upon that of Great Britain as early as 1900 and later a railway labor disputes act which provided chiefly for conferences before a conciliation board to bring out the facts and promote understanding and voluntary agreement. Experience seems to have strengthened faith in the effect of complete inquiry and a full setting forth of facts and claims, and this led to the development of the legislation along these lines. The existing law was adopted by the Dominion parliament early in 1907. What is chiefly made obligatory is submitting to investigation by an official board before any strike or lockout can be ordered. The party contemplating an order to strike or to lock out employees is required to notify the government, state that all possible means of settlement between themselves have been exhausted, and ask for the appointment of an investigating board.

The minister of labor calls upon each of the parties to name a member of the board. These two may agree upon the third, or, if they fail or prefer it, the minister of labor himself will select him. Until the investigation is concluded conditions must be kept in statu quo as to the matters in dispute, and there can be no strike or lockout under severe penalty. In the first place there must be at least thirty days' notice of the intended change of conditions, the demand for higher wages or different terms of any kind on the part of workmen or of the intention of a reduction of wages or other unfavorable change by the employing company. After this and the application for investigation by either party and the appointment of the board, there must be a full inquiry conducted in public with power to summon witnesses and compel testimony.

An award is made in accordance with what is determined to be the merits of the case, but there is nothing compulsory about its acceptance. It is not an arbitration, and there is no legal restraint except in submitting to the investigation and furnishing evidence. The purpose is to ascertain facts with completeness, get them fully before the public and appeal to the sense of justice in the parties concerned and in the public, as the only means of enforcement necessary. The penalties spoken of are only for not complying with the law to submit all questions to investigation and await the result before ordering a strike or lockout. The penalty section of the act reads: "Any employer declaring or causing a lockout contrary to the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1000 for each day or part of a day that such a lockout exists. Any employee who goes on strike contrary to the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50 for each day or part of a day that such employee is on strike. Any person who incites, encourages or aids in any manner any employer to declare or continue any lockout, or any employee to go or continue on strike contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of an offense and liable to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000."

There was naturally much question as to how this would work in practice, but it seems to have put an end to labor troubles with which Canada had been seriously afflicted before. The Honorable W. L. Mackenzie King, who was the Dominion minister of labor when the investigation act was adopted and put into effect, gave an account of its working at the annual dinner of the railway business association in New York some three or four years ago, in which he credited it with complete success. He said that the statute was put upon the books by the liberal party and was fully accepted by the conservative party when it came into power. He cited evidence of the satisfaction of the various brotherhoods, and unions of railway employees. He regarded it himself as more desirable and effective for the purpose of industrial peace than any compulsory arbitration. In closing his address Mr. King said: "If you can fashion some measure which will enable you to place before mankind at large a situation in its true and in its proper light, and bring all its bearing upon the community, whether it be small or large, and place your trouble or your wrong, whatever it may be, before the great body of organized public opinion, if you can fashion a measure to do that end which will enable you to do that thing, then it seems to me that you can leave, with confidence, the result to the working-out of the eternal maxim that 'justice is the common concern of mankind.'"

Water and Greens For Chicks

During the spells of hot weather the drinking water for chicks should be replenished at least twice a day. Hot, stale water is not appetizing and will have the same sickening effect upon fowls as it will upon mankind. Unless they consume plenty of water the birds will not only suffer greatly from the heat, but will be unable to contribute much to the summer egg yield.

Bad odors arise with double strength on hot days, especially on premises that are not kept clean. Not only should the droppings be frequently gathered, but disinfectants must be employed. Bad odors harbor disease germs, and so long as they are present the health of the flock is kept in jeopardy. Another fruitful source of this case is unclean drinking vessels. Once a week they should have a good cleaning. A small lump of lime constantly kept in the vessel will assist greatly in purifying the drinking water.

During hot spells plenty of green food should be given and the quantity of heating food reduced. Green food has a medicinal effect. It keeps the bowels in good shape and it prevents scurvy taints of the blood. Fowls enjoy greens best in the morning. It seems to be a bracer for them, and it is then that it apparently does them the most good.
