THE YOUNG CZARINA.

A Beautiful Woman of Bright and Vigorous Intellect.

She is Passionately Fond of Music and Makes a Study of Matters Pertaining to the Government of Nations.

The beautiful young empress of Russia looked upon her recent coronation, not as doubtless have many others in her place, only as a state function of unparalleled splendor, but as a solemn religious rite. She makes no secret of the fact that she has taken life most seriously since her betrothal to the czarowitz became an accomplished fact; nor yet that, in spite of her devotion to her husband, the man of her heart's choice, as well as the suitor whom the statesmen of her country thought it desirable she should espouse, she considers that the brightest part of her life was left behind with her irresponsible girlhood. During their honeymoon, as was natural with a young lover, the czar was inclined to cut audiences of state short, to sign official documents with hardly a glance at their contents, and to openly display impatience when too many details were submitted to his consideration. With womanly tact and sweet reasonableness, the czarina has modified all this. Her bright and vigorous intellect has known how to give interest to the dullness of business of state; her originality has thrown a glamour over the monotonous round of court ceremonies, while her suggestions as to what might be done for this or that section of the community have done much to make her consort realize that the millions he has to govern are human individuals, and not one great vague indefinite whole.

We do not assert that the young empress would not in time have made this discovery for herself, but it is notorious that his youth and disinclination to interfere in public affairs have kept him more in the background than is usual with heirs to the throne, while his father's unexpected death prevented the late czar from associating his son with himself in the administration of the empire. It is an undoubted fact that Emperor Alexander thought most highly of his future daughter-in-law's strength of purpose and force of character, and in the conversations he had with her during his last illness it is likely he spoke long and seriously on the opportunities she would have of influencing her husband and thus indirectly swaying the destinies of the vast and great race about to be committed to his hands.

It is nothing new to the Muscovite statesmen to note the gracious presence of a lady in the council chamber. The young czarina is only following the example of the dowager empress when, unannounced, she quietly enters the room, usually with some dainty needlework in her hand, and seating herself where, by raising her dark beautiful eyes, she can let them rest on her husband's face, proceeds to give eager and intelligent attention to all that is going on.

It is known that Princess Alix of Hesse was passionately fond of music, and as, in marrying the czar, she entered a family whose devotion to the art is equalled by few, it might be thought that she would spend more time than ever at the instrument she prefers. The contrary is the case, the magnificent piano in her boudoir will remain closed for long mornings at the time, while the graceful head of the young empress is bent low over some page in the arabic characters of the Muscovite tongue, or one which, while written in the simpler language of the French, deals with subjects of no more general interest than international law.—London Queen.

The Hustler Dispelled.
An elderly Russian pifness much addicted to gambling, and very superstitious, was one day engaged in her favorite pastime when a gentleman of genial aspect, but horribly deformed, came and sat down beside her. "How lucky!" thought the good lady. In this persuasion, and with the assurance common to persons of high rank, she began to stroke the protuberance of the hunchback whilst increasing the amount of her stakes. In the course of half an hour she lost 60,000 francs, yet she did not complain, being firmly convinced that she would recover the whole amount before very long. But suddenly the hunchback stopped playing and, as he stood up, he looked as tall as a grenadier. He thrust his hand up his back and withdrew—the hump. The latter was nothing more or less than a huge felt wide-awake that the wearer had stowed away under his coat to save himself the trouble of leaving it in the cloakroom. The supposed hunchback was as straight as a pikestaff. The princess flew into a passion, called him a swindler and an impostor, and it required the united efforts of all her friends to pacify her.—El Diluvio.

Stub Ends of Thoughts.
The telephone takes everybody's word.
The five o'clock tea is the grub that makes the butterfly of fashion.
It is usually hard for a man who stretches the truth to get out of the way of the recoil.
The June bug makes more noise than a wasp, but he does not command as much respect.

Paradoxical as it may seem, it is a fact that the more mumm a man gets the more loquacious he grows.

True to the nature of the beast, many a man who, in his time, has cast sheep's eyes at a pretty girl, has afterwards had the wool pulled over them.—Up to Date.

Unreasonable.
"My husband," said a young wife, "is a very unreasonable man!"
"In what way?" asked a friend.
"He expects me to live on nothing and save half."—Detroit Free Press.
