A copy of the old familiar favorite appears on our table and is most heartily welcome. In our opinion it is altogether the best farmer's monthly published, because the aim of the publishers is to benefit their patrons, and it is carried out intelligently. Only those who read it can tell how well this is done. To us, the most interesting articles of the number before us are "How the Mennonites Warm their Houses and Cook with Straw as Fuel," and "Nebraska Stock Farm." The first is just the sort of information needed by Nebraska farmers, who have -Columbus traveling men should abundance of hay and straw that might be utilized as fuel. Illustrations of the stoves and chimneys are given, with dimensions, so that any farmer could have them constructed for himself. The other article is an illustration and description, with somewhat of the history of the stock farm of T. H. Leavitt, at Riverside, Neb., three miles southwest of Lincoln. There are a thousand and one items of information in regard to farming, gardening, stock-raising, household work, &c., that are worth many times the yearly subscription price of this excellent magazine. The editor has lately been traveling through Nebraska and the west, and we hope that his appreciation of Nebraska interests will be substantially reciprocated by Nebraska farmers, who can not do themselves and families a better favor than by

-In a talk Saturday with Wm. Stevens, who is regarded as one of the best stock men in this section, he told us he had lost no cattle by the prevalent complaint, which nearly all now agree in calling dry murrain. He lets his stock out into cornfields and elsewhere after ten o'clock, giving them a full feed of hay before that time, with a run to all the water they want, and access at will to a mixture of salt, sulphur and saltpetre, fifteen parts of the first to one each of the last. Part of his calves are kept corraled all the time, the other part let out with the rest of the herd, and one lot are just as good as the other. He believes that a great many cattle that are watered by hand don't get enough if he had to pump water for one hundred head they wouldn't get as much as a windmill can do, to supply enough fresh water.

Farmers' Hospitality. MR. EDITOR: - There is not more hospitable class of people than farmers in the world. The writer of this would not in any way discourage them in the practice of this noble virtue, but a few hints in regard to it will not be amiss. One honor is worth another. When our city friends come out into the country, they generally consider it as a matter of course that their teams be fed, and a good and beautiful table be set for themselves, but very few of them ever ask for their bill, nor do they ever return the compliment; on the contrary, the farmer when he comes to town has to open his that fair?

pocket - book for everything. Is Again, Mr. Editor, some farmers and their wives go beyond their means in the practice of hospitality. If a man or a woman has to get groceries, provisions, feed, etc., on trust, it is not right either for him or her to be so liberal in feeding others, nor is it right for neighbors and others to impose upon people so circumstanced, but rather to tell them to be just before they are liberal. The writer of this is a farmer and it has been his practice all his lifetime to invite everybody to his table who comes or happens to be him at meal time, but it has sometimes considerably provoked him to have people come after meal extra table. It is right to be kind to each other, but it is wrong to impose burdens. The most willing German edition of the American horse can be balked by overloading.
