THE PRINCE OF TRAMPS. The Grandson of Patrick Henry.

The very romance of tramp life was exemplified yesterday by a dissipated individual with only one leg, whose name was registered at the station house as W. H. Cardwell. He is known to many persons as a reporter, and has lived a most variegated life. His full name is Wyatt Henry Cardwell. His father was the eminent Dr. Cardwell, of Richmond, Va., and his mother was the eldest daughter of the world renowned orator, Patrick Henry. Cardwell is said to be a graduate of Washington University; and has withal a polished education. He has the remarkable gift of repeating long poems from memory. It is said he can troll out "Childe Harold," "Don Juan," and such poems from beginning to end. At the age of fifteen he joined the Confederate army and was shot at Manassas, losing his leg. He was taken to the Richmond hospital, where he excited the attention of prominent ladies and gentlemen by his precocity. Afterwards he became private secretary to Senator Foote. He has wandered all over the country, being now heard of in New York, now in Cincinnati, now in Louisville and now in Washington. At the present time he is heard of in Memphis. He has done considerable newspaper work in his time, was connected with the National Star at Goodman, Miss., in 1878, and afterward was on the Kosciusko Chronicle. Wherever he has been, he has had a pursuer—whiskey. It has made him tramp all over the United States, and has frequently caused him to be arrested. He has an extensive acquaintance with the great men of this country, and has now in his possession a letter from Alexander H. Stephens congratulating him on his reform. He is a man of good address and has reduced begging to a fine art. For instance, in approaching a stranger, he will say: "Will you pardon the perfect ingenuousness of the request, but could you lend me half a dollar to get a night's lodgings?" Should the person thus approached deny the request, he will not be indignant or insulting, but will gracefully change the conversation to national politics, the ethics of journalism, the traits of great men or similar topics. He is an accomplished performer on the banjo. With all his bad habits he is said to be honest. It is the one remnant of the Virginia gentleman. A more remarkable career could hardly be imagined. From a fine family to the profession of a common tramp, and he is only about 35 years of age. There was a time when he could force his way into the families of respectable people, but he does so no longer, and it is only too palpable that he has lost caste with himself.—Memphis Appeal.

Playing with Electricity.

The correspondent of the New York Tribune is of the opinion that Siemen's electric railroad is not a success. As illustrated at the Electric Exhibition it could not be made useful for long periods or distances. One great trouble is controlling the cars when they are in motion. The current takes the "bit between its teeth," and plunges headlong regardless of anything and everything in the way. Speaking of one of these "runaways," the writer says: "The scientific calm of the palace was broken by a vigorous shouting and hallooing as of hostlers trying to head off a runaway horse, and the visitors were startled but not a little amused to see the wagon come blundering in at the east door at top speed, a group of attendants running before and throwing in its way railroad ties and other obstacles, to try and stop it, but over which it went bobbing and hopping with an elephantine gravity funny to witness. It had its willful way till brought up standing against the ticket office, nearly knocking the ticket woman through the wicket, shaking up the passengers, and creating general confusion "sur toute la ligne." The maximum of speed was to be six to seven miles an hour, but this could have been increased. Although the attempts have not been as successful as Siemen could have desired, the Tribune writer says it is safe to predict that long before the century is out we shall have electric dummies running on surface and elevated roads. In its varied phases the Electric Exhibition of 1881 has laid under contribution the minutest devices of applied science. It is one of the most notable in those milestones in history which mark the progress of the race toward a deeper wisdom, a freer, broader and purer existence.

Dan Rice's Romantic Marriage.

Dan Rice, who was the best known showman in the country twenty-five years ago, has experienced strange vicissitudes during the last ten years, and has varied his professional career with occasional experiments in the line of religious exhortations and temperance crusading. Lately the court of Erie county granted his wife a divorce on the ground of desertion, and thus terminated what was in its earlier days a very romantic union. In 1845 the showman was exhibiting in Girard, Erie county, and his attention was attracted by a remarkably beautiful child in her nurse's arms. He asked her name, and subsequently fixing his residence in Girard, he kept up a lively interest in the girl, who was the daughter of a leading citizen, deacon in the Presbyterian church and president of the local bank. At that time Dan rolled in wealth and spent his money lavishly, not only in the erection of a magnificent house, but in adorning the town. He was married to an estimable woman, who had been on the stage, and about fifteen years after his arrival in Girard she sued for a divorce. Shortly afterwards Dan carried off his youthful inamorata, much against the wishes of the paternal deacon, who disinherited his daughter, but when Dan failed in 1873 was reconciled and took them to his house. The showman's extensive property was sacrificed piecemeal in unprofitable ventures and his life grew irregular. His professions of temperance and religion were looked upon as advertising schemes and his wife grew cold and finally declined to see him. It is said he refused to oppose a divorce. Rice began his career as a jockey boy for Henry Clay on his Lexington farm, and at one time was considered worth half a million, owning among other property an opera house in New Orleans.

So Alike.

In the New York Zoological garden is a baboon which wears store clothes, eats at a table and is learning to talk. A few days since a young lady and young gentleman of Detroit, who rumor says were soon to meekly bow their heads beneath the matrimonial yoke, were visiting the garden and strolled about for an hour gazing in unconcealed wonder upon the many curiosities there exhibited. In the great crowd the couple in some manner became separated and the young lady roamed frantically about in search of her escort. He was also alarmed for the safety of his dear one and hunted for her for some time, at last catching sight of her at some little distance from him. Rushing toward her with a sigh of relief he came up to her just in time to see her take the arm of the baboon and say: "Oh, Fred, I never was so frightened in my life. I thought I would never find you again!" They rode back to the hotel in separate cabs.—Tribune Press.

Political Bosses in New York and Pennsylvania.

The Philadelphia Evening Telegraph has a scathing but truthful article on the rule of the bosses in New York and Pennsylvania. The following extract is from the body of the editorial, and will make Boss Cameron squirm: "If anybody desires to see the difference between the Congressional representatives of States ruled by bosses and States not ruled by them, let him look into the Federal Senate and House, taking the measure first of the pignions from Pennsylvania and New York, and then of the giants from Ohio and Massachusetts. Pennsylvania and New York are the two first Commonwealths of the Union, but would anybody suspect it who saw how for years and years they have been represented in Congress? The reason why they are not represented at all, but, on the contrary, misrepresented, is because in either of them a political boss has for years dictated who should go to the House of Representatives and who to the Senate. In those other States which are nobly represented in House and Senate, the people say who shall represent them, and the people's choice, when it is exercised freely, is always just and wise. If anybody knows of anything more pitiable than the position of the great, wealthy, intelligent and populous Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in the National Legislature, he is better informed than other men, for he holds that any man of the most ordinary judgment will concede, upon careful review of our Representatives and Senators, that they are conspicuous in Congress only by their unfitness to be in Congress. They are absolutely without national influence; they neither originate, make nor shape the national statutes. They control a few subordinate offices, enough to run 'the machine' of the bosses. As for our Senators, neither of them rises to those low planes upon which even mediocrity browses; in any great crisis of affairs, in any great debate, in any great movement they sit dumb as oysters in their seats, a feeble, pitiable duality, a brace of incompetents, who sit unabashed by the shame and humiliation with which they inspire their abler associates from States not dominated by registers and bosses that produce such fearful political abortions labeled Senators and statesmen."

The newspapers are talking a great deal about where the next world's fair shall be held. The next world's fair are the angels, and we doubt if they like to be talked about in that way. At any rate they won't let everybody hold them.

In Paterson, N. J., the girls who work in the factories are paid so much better than the young men that the girls do the treating and pay for the ice cream and oysters when they go out together.

A farmer's daughter living near Cleveland, Ohio, answered a personal in a newspaper, entered into a correspondence with the unknown, finally met him, was married, went to the city to live, and returned to her father's house in two months dressed like a beggar, and looking twenty years older than when she went away. Her husband was a professional gambler and loafer. This is a personal romance in a nutshell.

Peter Irving, in charge of the work of the Oregon Improvement company, on the Thielsen flume, near Walla Walla, reports 130 men and 40 teams constantly employed getting out ties, posts, lumber, cord wood, etc. There is now on the ground 200,000 ties, 500,000 feet of lumber, 1,200 cords of wood and 8,000 posts. This is the result of the work of the company at one solitary point.

Peruvian Bitters.

Cinchona Rubra. The Count Cinchon was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1630. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermitting fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the world, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1632, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona, in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Incas. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take the place of the Cinchona. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroy. We guarantee the ingredients of these bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order it.

A cough, cold or sore throat should be stopped. Neglect frequently results in an incurable lung disease—consumption. Brown's Bronchial Troches do not disorder the stomach like cough syrups and balsams, but act directly on the inflamed part, relieving irritation, giving relief in asthma, bronchitis, coughs, catarrh, and the throat troubles which singers and public speakers are subject to. For forty years Brown's bronchial troches have been recommended by physicians, and always give perfect satisfaction. Having been tested by wide and constant use for nearly an entire generation, they have attained well-merited rank among the few staple remedies of the age. Sold at 25 cents a box everywhere.

The Peruvian syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint, boils, humors, female complaints, etc. Pamphlets free to any address. Seth W. Fowler & Sons, Boston.

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvelous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary coughs, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in throat and chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every house. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and effects, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and everywhere recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.
