GOLDEN THOUGHTS.

He who waits to do a great deal of good at once will never do any. It is to live twice to be able to enjoy the retrospect of your past life.

Have patience with all things, but chiefly have patience with yourself.

If peace of mind is our sure possession, we may smile at every misfortune or loss.

Men often judge the person, but not the cause, which is not justice, but malice.

There is nothing which so refines the face and mind as the presence of great thoughts.

The natural affections are debased by vice as they are ennobled and refined by virtue.

You cannot bring the best out of a man unless you believe the best is somewhere in him.

We may laugh or weep at the madness of mankind; we have no right to vilify him.

Training the hand and eye to do work well leads individuals to form correct habits in other respects.

Do not lose courage by considering your own imperfections, but instantly set about remedying them.

Wicked men stumble over straws in the way to heaven, but climb over hills in the way to destruction.

It doesn't hurt a good man to have his character investigated; neither does it hurt coin to try its ring.

A spirit of contradiction is so pendant and hateful that all should watch against every instance of it.

Those are Christians who are more careful to reform themselves than to be continually censuring others.

Do not begin to quarrel with the world too soon; for, bad as it may be, it is the best we have to live in—here.

He who easily forgets benefits done towards him is probably possessed of a shallow brain as well as a callous heart.

Neither a man nor a woman is entirely safe until he or she can endure blame or receive praise without excitement.

The chief properties of wisdom are to be mindful of things past, careful of things present, and provident of things to come.

It is a very curious fact that the lapse of years, while it lessens our enjoyment of life, but increases the natural desire of living.

How many hopes may have quivered for us in past years—have flashed like harmless lightning in summer nights, and died forever.

When people undertake to restrain themselves without knowing how, they are often worse off than if they had left themselves alone.

Memory can glean but can never renew. It brings us joy faint as the perfume of flowers—faded and dried, of the summer that is gone.

No persons, be they in ever so humble circumstances, but what have some quality of mind that entitles them to an equality with their fellow-beings.

The Penalty of Greatness.

Senator Fair frequently dines at an up-town hostelry. One day last week he started for that restaurant, and thoughtlessly walked into a saloon near by. He saw his mistake at once and started to go out, but it was too late. An eager crowd poured into the entrance and corralled him beyond hope of escape. "Senator, how are you?" "You're lookin' fine as a fiddle, Mr. Fair." "Tis he that stands in with the boys," and other hearty greetings somewhat embarrassed him. One excited individual moved to the door and shouted to a friend across the street: "Aste-lad, aste! Com ho'er! Fair's in yon. Hurry in, an' bring all the b'ys wid ye!" In less than a minute a straggling crowd blocked the doorway. The Senator was equal to the situation. "You'll oblige me, boys, by drinking with me this time," he said as he laid a twenty dollar silver certificate on the bar. The offer was accepted unanimously, and he finally elbowed his way out through the exultant crowd.—Virginia City Chronicle.

Sarcastical.

A Chronicle reporter has been interviewing one of the O. R. & N. Co's immigration agents in San Francisco:

"We have been very successful so far," said the agent, modestly. "We have sent up a large number of Swedes, Danes, Norwegians, and other European emigrants, as well as a good many from the East."

"Any from California?" asked the reporter.

The agent's face grew dark. "No, sir," said he, firmly and almost fiercely; "we don't care about taking Californians. There's something in the air here that spoils a man for life in Oregon."

The reporter's sorrow at finding himself breathing such a vitiated atmosphere did not prevent him from observing that the properties of the Oregon air were greatly affected by the line of railroads.

For instance, in describing the beauty of the climate of Eastern Oregon, the agent incidentally mentioned that in the thickly settled counties in the East people imagined at times that malaria was present. The rains in those populous localities occasionally possessed a sharpness about them disgraceful to the webfoot Utopia, and the sun blazed instead of beamed. But out in Eastern Oregon, where the railroad lots had been surveyed and ranked in symmetrical blue squares on the map, the atmosphere was as sweet as the smile of a maiden and as pure as the heart of an infant. There it was that the reeking soil threw up the luxuriant wheat and barley and the atmosphere was as sweet as the smile of a maiden and as pure as the heart of an infant.

How many hopes may have quivered for us in past years—have flashed like harmless lightning in summer nights, and died forever.

When people undertake to restrain themselves without knowing how, they are often worse off than if they had left themselves alone.

Memory can glean but can never renew. It brings us joy faint as the perfume of flowers—faded and dried, of the summer that is gone.

No persons, be they in ever so humble circumstances, but what have some quality of mind that entitles them to an equality with their fellow-beings.

To succeed in any of life's endeavors, be our talents what they may, we require perseverance, decision and tenacity of will to reach the full measure of success.

Senator Fair frequently dines at an up-town hostelry. One day last week he started for that restaurant, and thoughtlessly walked the percentage of deaths in California and Arizona was greater than in any part of the United States except the pestiferous State of Louisiana. On the other hand, Oregon stood out in the proud consciousness of large type, as the healthiest of forty-seven States and Territories—the comparison of the webfoot district and Arizona being 0.69 to 2.61. Considering that the agents of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company calculate thousands of these pamphlets, and interview and impress the best class of settlers, it is not strange that the tide of immigration is towards the slopes of the Cascades, and not to the plains of the San Joaquin and Kern county.

Carrying it Too Far.

Rev. Dr. Dickinson, in an address before the Baptist ministers of New York upon the outlook in the South, illustrated his view with a story of an old Southern Baptist elder who managed to bring into every sermon he preached the sentiment that all things work together for good. In Sherman's march to the sea, the elder's house was burned, and his cow and pigs were set adrift. The old man was found sorrowfully sitting under an apple tree. He was deaf, and his questioner shouted: "What do you think now of your theory that all things work together for good to those who trust in the Lord?" The elder shook his head and said: "I think the Lord is carrying this thing a little too far."

Rev. E. P. Tenney, the genial and witty president of Colorado College, was at one time the beloved pastor of the Congregational church in a sea-coast town in Massachusetts. To eke out his salary, his people gave him a donation, among the presents being a fine new dress-coat for the pastor, and a tasty bonnet for his better half. On the following Sunday, as they walked up the aisle in their new habiliments, the choir inadvertently struck out with the voluntary, much to the discomfort of the sensitive clergyman and his wife. "Who are these in bright array?"

At the same church, a few weeks ago, the funeral of a prominent and highly respected citizen of the town, by the name of Knight, occurred, on which occasion, by a singular contretemps, the choir sang as their first selection the usually fitting hymn, "There will be no night there." The effect, as soprano, alto, and tenor successively took up the refrain, was well calculated to excite the risibles of those who had gathered in any but a humorous spirit.

CHARLES & MORTON, Prop's.

Mothers! Mothers!! Mothers!!!

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, it will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it, there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it, who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother, and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Sold every where, 25 cents a bottle.

Peruvian Bitters.

Cinchona Rubra. The Count Cincel was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1620. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1624, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona, in honor of the lady who had brought them that, which was more precious than the gold of the Indies. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take its place. It eventually cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, restores the natural tone of the stomach, it attacks excessive loss of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both alike. The powerful tonic virtues of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroys. We guarantee the ingredients by restoring the natural tone of pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitters in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly admit this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order it.
