A Sea Monster Hoax.

What proved for a time to be the most successful sea monster hoax on record was perpetrated in New York by Dr. Albert C. Koch in 1845. He exhibited on Broadway the skeleton of an alleged fossil monster which he named the "hydrarchos," or "sea king." The remains, including the head and vertebrae, measured not less than 114 feet over all, and the people of New York, as well as of other American cities visited, were greatly excited. But finally Professor Wyman, a naturalist of considerable circumspection, examined the skeleton and discovered it to be a composite, including the bones of several zeuglodos strung together. Finally it was sold by Koch to the museum of Dresden.—Albany Knickerbocker Press.

How Napoleon Got Officers.

Napoleon had a novel way of obtaining officers to meet the needs of the ever growing army which the adoption of conscription brought about. Following the example of Frederick the Great, he created a new military caste. He organized the great military college of St. Cyr and founded a cavalry school where, in the words of his own order, "if well born the candidates should be examined with indulgence as regards knowledge of arithmetic and geometry."

Youths of good family were in many cases compelled against their will to go to St. Cyr. Strange as it may seem, some of the youths thus "commandeered" and obliged to adopt a military vocation turned out brilliantly.—London Chronicle.

Tongues of the Felines.

All members of the cat family possess tongues that are more or less rough, due to points of tough cartilage which cover them. In ordinary house cats this roughness is very slight, but in the larger feline species the points are sometimes fully an eighth of an inch long. Ordinarily the tongue is soft and smooth, but when the animal becomes aroused the points become rigid, making it a very dangerous weapon.

Keeping Cool.

Mrs. Peck—Henry, what would you do if burglars should break into our house some night? Mr. Peck (valiantly)—Humph! I should keep perfectly cool, my dear. And when, a few nights later, burglars did break in, Henry kept his promise—he hid in the icebox.
