MAH HOOD
How Lost How Restored!
Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of Syphilis, Gonorrhea, Stricture, Venereal Infection, Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also, Consumption, Eczema and Figs, induced by self-indulgence, or sexual excesses, etc.
The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates (from thirty years' practical experience) that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by which the system is restored to its normal condition, and the patient cured cheaply, privately and radically.
This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
Sent under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, post-paid, on receipt of four cents or two postage stamps.

AROUND PERUGIA.
A Hill Country, Honeycombed with Etruscan Burial Vaults.
The old town of Perugia is well worth visiting on many accounts, writes a correspondent of the Journal of Commerce. Traveling by rail from Rome to Florence, one sees large clusters of houses perched high on the hillsides. They are crowned with campaniles and domes, surrounded by high walls, and provoke one's curiosity to make their closer acquaintance. But on consulting his guide-book the tourist finds that these elevated settlements contain a few objects of interest, better examples of which can be found elsewhere. He also learns, which is as much to the purpose, that they have no good hotels. Now, Perugia is very old, very quaint, full of venerable historical associations, a center of Etruscan tombs and other antiquities, 1,700 feet above the sea, and has a first-class hotel. This modern structure occupies the highest ground of the town, and commands a magnificent view of the Umbrian valley. East, south, and west I survey all the details of a landscape of variety and beauty unsurpassed. It is intersected by the Tiber and some smaller rivers, which flash in the morning sun. Many villages are visible as brown patches, among them Assisi, famous as the birthplace of St. Francis. Mountains bound the view on all sides. Some of them are still tipped with snow, and their summits would easily be mistaken for clouds, if the latter were not scurrying past in the south wind. This wind will soon melt the snow, and is already making Perugia uncomfortable. As I write a haze is beginning to blot out the more distant villages. A heated term is threatening. But Americans are not to be frightened by that. Only I wish the roads were not so white and dusty.
This country is a vast cemetery. No one can say how many races were buried here before the Etruscans passed away in their turn and left the ground honeycombed with their tombs. When one sinks a well or digs a cellar for a house he is apt to strike his spade against a rock, which gives back a hollow sound. It is the roof of an Etruscan burial vault. From this subterranean chamber the air has been excluded for more than two thousand years. I am told that strange things are sometimes seen in these tombs at the moment when they are opened, and then vanish forever. They say that glimpses are caught of old Etruscan lords and ladies sitting at banquets, and that these disappear the instant the outer air touches them. When the finder proceeds to open and examine the tomb he discovers nothing but a heap of dust in place of the vision that had startled him. These are obviously fables, for the most part. Though I believe that it is true that an Etruscan knight in full armor collapsed to dusty nothingness in precisely this way when his tomb was invaded a few years ago. We have been to see the sepulcher of the Volturni, about five miles below Perugia and found it and its contents very strange and interesting. It is supposed to date back to the third century, B. C. A descent of some thirty steps leads down to it from the roadside. First, a chamber about twenty-five feet square is entered, and from this smaller apartments branch to right and left. The sepulcher is hewn out of the tufa rock. It is very damp and cold. Heads of Medusa, dolphins, and serpents are carved with much skill on the top and sides of this tomb. All around stand small stone urns, each one bearing in alto relievo the representation of a fight. One man is always killing another unless the scene is varied by the sacrifice of a bound and helpless woman or child on an altar. The covers of these urns are higher works of art. They are surmounted with recumbent figures of the men and women. These are dressed in the costume of their age and sex, and each has in his or her hand a bowl for tears. Lifting off a cover I find inside the urn about a hat full of ashes. I run my fingers through this mass and feel fragments of burnt bones. But I am rudely stirring up all that remains of some gallant warrior or some haughty beauty, and I withdraw my hand with a sense of remorse. A great many personal ornaments of exceeding richness and grace have been taken from these receptacles, and are separately exhibited by the custodian. But if one wishes to realize the full extent of the arts and sciences familiar to the old Etruscans he should inspect the splendid collection in the university museum at Perugia.

He Saw the Card.
A United States Senator, who, years ago, used to flirt with chance, but who has since become a staid and conservative citizen, said to a Washington Critic reporter one day last week:
"Here is a card story that you won't believe, but it happened just the same. Just after the war I was in Washington on a visit, and one night I went around to a gambling house with several acquaintances. I happened to know the man who ran the place, and stopped in the ante-room for a few minutes to talk to him while the rest of the party passed into the card-room. In a short time I followed. There was a faro layout there and a crowd gathered about it, and as I came up the cards had just been put in the box for a fresh deal. The instant I looked at the box I saw under the first card, which you know does not count, the jack of clubs. It was as plain to my eyes as though the top card were made of glass. Before the dealer began I asked him what odds he would give me if I called the second card. He looked up a little queerly, and the people about the table laughed derisively. 'That is a curious way of betting,' he said, 'but I'll lay you ten to one that you can't.' I put down $10 and called the jack, and when he removed the top card the jack of clubs was there sure enough just as I had seen it. I would have called the suit, but I was afraid he would not bet. The cards had been put in the box before I came up to the table, and the only one visible was the top card, but it is literally true that I saw the card under it. You don't believe it? I did not suppose you would. Nevertheless, this is absolutely a fact. Of course, I did not attempt to account for it, and it has never happened since."

The Queen Anne house which Justice Gray is going to build at Washington will cost about $75,000.

PURE GRIT.
Some Experiences of the Seamen of the Confederate Alabama.
I was one of the first men who signed papers with the much-vaunted confederate cruiser, the Alabama, and my service in her did not end until she sailed into an English port with the confederate flag flying. You will thus realize that I participated in the capture of several dozen federal merchantmen and whalers. There was a sameness about our manner of making captures which we were glad to have broken now and then. It was but rarely that a vessel was overhauled during the night. If we were in chase of her we simply kept her in sight, or tried to, until daylight came. While we could not anticipate any stubborn resistance, the right sort of a skipper might fire a volley into a boat's crew or go to some other uncomfortable extreme. As a rule we had only to close in on our victims, fire a solid shot across his course, and he would heave to and put the best face possible on a bad matter. The first lieutenant would be sent off to him with a boat and half a dozen marines, and in the course of half an hour his fate would be decided. If it was thought best to bond him the papers were made out and signed and he was permitted to go his way. If his craft was to be destroyed the men were allowed to bring up their clothing and knick-knacks, the officers to pack their personal effects, and inside of an hour the craft would be ablaze, and we would be sailing away in search of another victim.
When we ran around in search of whalers we came upon a Yankee skipper who didn't know what surrender meant. We were just well to the west of the stormy cape, when, one morning after breakfast, we raised a whaler. He was headed up the coast, and about noon we overhauled him. He paid no attention to the first shot, and it was only when the second one hulled him that he came into the wind. It was then seen that he had fifteen or sixteen men aboard, and that all were armed with muskets and meant to defend the ship. The lieutenant was sent off with his boat, but no sooner was he within fair musket range than the whaler opened fire on him, killing one man and wounding two at the first volley. The officer pushed ahead, and demanded a surrender, but he got another volley and the reply that the whaler "would go to the bottom before he would surrender to a d—rebel!"
The boat was recalled, and our gunners were instructed to hull the whaler with solid shot. We approached him within rifle-range and opened fire. Every one of the balls plumped through his side at and above the water-line, and he answered with his muskets, severely wounding two men. He was repeatedly hailed to surrender, but in reply he encouraged his men to maintain their fire. We soon had the sea pouring into his starboard side through a dozen holes, and when it was seen that he would soon go down we ceased firing and again demanded his surrender. I can remember just now how he looked as he sprang upon the rail—tall, gaunt, hair flying and eyes blazing, and shouted in reply:
"The Ben Scott don't surrender! Come and take us—if you can."
Five minutes later his craft settled down bow first. We lowered the boats to save his crew, and strangely enough not a man was lost. When we brought them aboard the Yankee skipper walked up to Semmes, bare-headed, bare-footed, and coatless, and said:
"If I'd only had one old cannon aboard we'd have licked ye out of your butes! Here we are, and what are ye going to do with us?"
He was voted a jolly good fellow, and the men were better treated than any other ever forced aboard. In order to give them their liberty the very next capture we made was bonded and they were put aboard to sail for home.—Detroit Free Press.

A Georgia Fish Story.
The old rounder, casting a meditative glance toward where the sun had gone down, said: "Well, gentlemen, I had a little experience of my own once. I went down on the Chattahoochee River, in Decatur County, to visit an old friend. He had often told me of the splendid fishing there, and I was anxious to try it. It was late in the evening when I got there, and I retired early, so as to be ready for the fun next day. I asked how far it was to the creek, and they told me it was only a few hundred yards, just beyond the fence. By light next morning I was up and securing a good tackle and a few sawyers, started off toward the creek. The fog was so heavy, for it was wood's burning time, that I could not see any distance ahead of me, and so I groped my way as best I could across the little clearing. Reaching the fence I climbed over, and picking my way carefully, for I did not want to fall in the creek, I proceeded slowly down the slope until I thought I must be near the water's edge. Baiting my hook I threw it forward, and just about time enough for it to strike the water I felt a pull, and with a jerk I brought in a fine fellow. For ten minutes I stood there and pulled them in, and then, fearing that I would spoil one day's sport, I regretfully retired, and by accident I reached the house through the fog. After breakfast the fog lifted and we got ready for a day's enjoyment. You may imagine my surprise when on going to the place where I had caught so many early in the morning, I found that it was a full hundred yards from the bank of the creek. The truth is, I had not touched the water, but just stood there and caught them out of the fog."—Atlanta Constitution.

To sit at that hour of luscious summer night when the lightning bug, vying with the stars, threads the air with golden shuttle, gazing earthward for his lady love, the expectant glow-worm, as she sits unwinged in the damp grass, to enjoy the odors of grass and clover and blossom, to hear the sighing of the rising night breeze, the cry of the night birds, the songs of a summer night's insects, and the full chorus of toad, frog, and tree-frog of the many varieties is to enjoy the saddest and sweetest and noblest chorus Nature has composed and leads.—Memphis Avalanche.
