WOMAN AND HOME.

THE "REST CURE" AND THE GREAT BENEFITS DERIVED FROM IT.

lifies Bertha Behrends-A Hindoo Comparison-The Well Groomed Woman-The Iroquois Women-Women Who Help Their Husbands-The Bachelor Woman,

The "rest curo" is now practiced at home by many women who have come to a proper realization of its value. It used to be an expensive remedy, necessitating an absence of six to eight weeks in a private hospital, with trained nurse, masseuse and the rest, including a trunkful of pretty tea gowns for the convalescence. Now the sensible woman has discovered she can take her cure in homeopathic doses without stopping her work or quitting her family.

A half hour daily of complete retirement, lying down in loose clothes, and banishing all worry, all thought indeed, if possible, works wonders if persevered in. Have the shades drawn and close the eyes. A tired brain strays restfully in darkened ways. Even mechanical eye im-pressions of which one does not seem to be thinking at all consume a little force. Blindness physically and mentally is what is sought, and it is this that rests

For the woman whose work is at home the half hour immediately preceding or following luncheon is apt to be one that could be spent in this way. Where there are children old enough to go to school, after the meal is better, for the little folks will have turned back to their lessons, no callers need be expected, and the afternoon's task or engagement can usually brook this little delay. For the mothers whose babies are still in arms the "rest" should be taken while their little charges sleep. Says one mother to this, "Why, that is my only chance to 'pick up' and 'catch up' with things.'' Spare the half hour to rest, and the picking up and catching up will be the better forwarded.

The business woman whose work must be done at office or shop must invent her chance for rest. It is a common habit of several young newspaper women report-ers to step into one of the big shops or hotels, seek the parlor and conscientiously rest for 15 or 50 minutes, as their time permits. In shops it must be taken with the stop for luncheon, as a rule. In offices it may also have to be, but often there is a lull in business that may be almost regularly depended upon.

The hodearrier finishes the contents of his dinner pail, then lolls against a friendly fence in sheer animal rest. Perhaps he lights a pipe—as often he does not—but he rests in every fiber of his being. A shop-girl hurries over her bread and tea to try her eyes and tax her interest with a story paper, eagerly devoured till the last moment, or she spends her "rest" time in ex-citing gossip with her neighbors. Either is foolish expenditure of needed force. The closer the strain the greater the need for the complete and daily respite, however brief. Such workers should pursue the opportunity to take it relentlessly.— New York Correspondent.

Miss Bertha Behrends.

The woman violinist is still sufficiently rare to be marked, and even among the comparatively few of such musicians the soloist, Miss Bertha Behrends, is conspicu-

At the early age of 5 years the golden haired little girl tried to imitate the musical proclivities of her elder sister with such success that a short time later, before she was 7 indeed, she was duly provided with a music master and the violin select-ed as the proper instrument to develop her decided talent. Much of the young girl's success is due to the careful training of her mother, a lady of fine musical taste whose encouragement to her daughter was invaluable. No hour was too early to find her risen that she might sit by the prac-ticing child, listening and criticising while

Miss Behrends' first public performance was at the age of 8 at a church concert. Her childish appearance as she stepped of the platform in a white dress, her long golden curls falling about her aboutders amazed the audience, tylese wonder soot gave way to delight as the little girl began When she was 12 years old, her tencher,

Mr. C. A. Allen of Boston, the famous vio linist, was obliged at the last moment to give up playing at a musicale for which he was announced. Rheumatism of the wrist had seized him with disastrons result. His young pupil, however, was selected to take his place, and before a critical and ence she gave the selection that was to have been rendered by her teacher, win-ning the highest praise. It was at this early age, too, that she had the distinction to play with Camilla Urso.

Miss Behrends has made her home latterly in New York, where her delightful talent has been much appreciated. She can justly be called one of the best of American woman violinists.

In personal appearance she is of a purblond type, tall and graceful, and gifted with a modesty of manner that is most attractive.-New York Mail and Express.

A Hindeo Comparison.

An impression seems to prevail in western countries that there is no love between the Hindoo wife and husband. The truth is, the Hindoo families are the happiest in the world. The Hindoo woman, having been tied to the lot of the man early, thinks only of him. His happiness is her happiness. She loves her husband devot-

In western nations I observe that the man works from morning to late in the night to earn money. He has no rest. Who enjoys the benefits of his money? His wife. While he is struggling to get the almighty dollar his wife is enjoying the luxuries and the leisure it buys she cannot get the newest fashion of oran-ments or clothing, she is often unhappy, and consequently if the husband canno buy them he, too, is made unhappy. Moreover, the women in America seen to have greater liberty than the men. The young girl is brought up by the mother to think that she is equal to man and in some respects superior to him. She reads love novels, spends much time at her tot let. She wears in her honnet flowers, feath ers, dead birds, seaweeds, moss, horns, thorns, big needless, and in her dress pins, hooks, ties, iron and brass bacs, clips, stitches and what not. And on her bosom I have seen her wear a living lizard fastened with a thin chain. Her walst is laced tight by a corset, which makes her pant for breath. Thus equipped, she sallies forth to make conquests of young men's hearts. She seems to me (pardon me; I write without offense) to lack the mild and delicately sweet look that even the commonest Hindoo woman has. Her look is bold and defying to the man. This is all owing to the innate feeling that she is equal to the man. In her pride she has forgotten weman's part.—Purushetam Rao Telang in Forum.

The Well Groomed Woman.

Have you ever noticed in a gathering of both sexes that it is not the absolutely beautiful girl or woman who attracts and receives the most attention, but it is she who has that essentially well groomed look about her indicative of physical tidi-ness and suggestive of more than ordinary attention to the details of her toilet?

Nature may have endowed you with absolutely regular features, a form divine and a voice soft and low, but if you let your hair evidence a carelessness of thought in its keeping, and your hands, shapely though they may be, are allowed to go un-tidy, you might just as well be absolutely ugly for all the genuine admiration that you will receive. Daintiness counts more in the long run than beauty. The whole-some, healthy looking woman is a more attractive figure than the indolent beauty with a dark streak around her fair neck and a dusty head of hair.

A physician who ought to know says that a tub bath every day will ruin a woman's nerves if continued for a year. We will not dispute his say, but individually will run the risk of having to advertise for those essentially feminine possessions in the lost and found column, as so far we feel all right, and if our nerves are los so much the better, for every woman can get along much better without them any-

If there are those with whom a tub bath does not agree, the sponge is an equivalent that can be recommended. Make cleanli-ness a religion. It leads to health and enhances physical beauty. Regard your body as the tenement of a beautiful soul and make it as decorative as possible. There is no sin in trying to look your best, but there is a lot of good hard common sense in it, and the first step in that direction is through the medium of thorough tidiness and an intimate acquaintance with the purifying qualities of scap and water.— Philadelphia Times.

The Iroquois Women.

A gentleman, recently returned from a visit to the Indians of the Onondaga reservation in this state, said the other day: "I was surprised to find the women of the nation held in such high esteem. My preconceived notion of the Indian squaw that she is the drudge and slave of her lazy, semibarbarous master, and that she is in no way honored by the males of her race. This is the case, I am told, with most tribes of the American red men, but it was never so with the nations of the Iroquois confederacy. In fact, the women were held in so high regard by the Iro-quois that they were spoken of as a people ruled by wome

"This peculiarity is evidenced in their life today. It is true that there isn't much work done by any of the Indians, but the men do most of what is done, the squaw only being called on to attend to her household duties. The superiority of the squaw to the buck is shown in the fact that the children, according to the custom of the Iroquois, belong to the family or nation of their mother. If a Seneca Indian marries an Onondaga squaw and they have children, the latter are Onon-dagas, and should the father be of the family of the Wolf and the mother of the Snipe clan the children are Snipes. It is as if John Smith married Mary Jones and a child of the marriage was named John Jones. Another indication of the superiority of the squaw is shown in the Indian manner of speaking of a man and a woman. In English they habitually refer to 'her and him' as doing something being somewhere or saying something. Possibly they are more grammatical in the use of their own dialect."—New York

Women Who Belo Their Bushands.

The remark of Oliver Wendell Holme the effect that literary men often play the part of great, imposing, beautiful ships, while some busy little tug of a wife is pulling them along and not being much admired for it, is exemplified in numerous lterary men of the present Hardy was debating whether to be an architect or to write the greatest novels of the age and was decided in favor of attempting the latter by his wife. She is his amanuensis and took the burden upon herself of copying his first novel and send-ing it out herself. She keeps herself in touch with the literature of the day much more thoroughly than her husband does, and he relies upon her to keep him posted on all possible subjects.

Mrs. Rider Haggard is another woman who is invaluable to her husband in every way. It is not only her duty to read and criticise every word he writes before it is submitted to a publisher, but she is equally one with him in all his occupations, and rides and tramps about the country with him as tirelessly as any man could. To Mrs. Osear Wilde has fallen the lot of being an exemplification of her husband's esthetic doctrines, wearing the draperies and colors of his choice, creating the mosphere" in which the erratic genius could work and generally impressing the public.—Pittsburg Times.

The Bachelor Woman.

What is a bachelor woman? Well, as nearly as I can make out, she is that wom-an who, for some cause, real or imaginary, has undertaken the care of herself alone, or of herself and one or more others, just as the men we see all about us are doing. I don't think the lines are drawn around us, however, just as they are around the man whom we all call a "bachelor," but it seems to be more a term applied to us simply in relation to the public or business phase of our lives, and not at all, or but very slightly, to the social and domestic. For instance, the term is equally applied to two friends of mine, and one is a maiden of tender years, comparatively, and the other is a widow with five children in her charge, all of whom she has provided for since her husband's death, some 15 years ago. The one goes out each day to a courtroom and takes down the words of wisdom that are always flowing from our learned lawyers' and judges' tongues, and the other walks into the office of a weekl; journal and edits its columns with a bright perfection seldom excelled. Yet I have heard them both described as "bachele women," and I think the reason must be as I have said above—that this term ap plies almost exclusively to our public lives. -St. Louis Republic.

How She Kept Her Girl.

She made all the other women madly envious by saying that she had a jewel of a girl; that she had had her for four years, and that she expected to have her forever. The other women asked her how

"I pay her well," she amounted in the beginning. "I also pay her regularly. If she wants to send her money home, she can do it at a given date. She is in no more uncertainty about her salary than my husband is. Her room is pleasant
