Turkey Fattening.

At this season of the year, the subject of and a little attention to this matter for a few weeks will increase the profits of the farmer and the pleasure of the consumer. It is only | with others:when the cold comes, and turkeys are shout six months old, says the Rural New Yorker. that they should be fed better and more plen titul food, in order to increase their size and plumpness for market. Indian corn, ground barley, wheat, also rice, and other articles used to fatten common fowls, are considered best for turkeys. Their weight, when well fattened and carried to market, should average twelve pounds; their living and dead weight is as eignteen to twelve pounds. Much has been published of late in our agricultural journals in relation to the alimentary properties of charcoal. It has been repeatedly asserted that domestic fowls may be fattened on it without any other food, and that, too, in a shorter time than on the most nutritive grains. "I have recently made an experiment," says a writer for a Philadelphia paper, "and must say that the result surprised me, as I had always been rather skeptical. Four turkeys were confined in a pen and fed on meal, boiled potatoes and oats. Four others, of the same broad, were also, at the same time, confined in another pen and fed on the same articles, but with one pint of very finely pulverized charcoal mixed with their food-mixed meal and boiled potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed on the same day and there was a difference of one and a half pounds each in favor of the towls which had been supplied with the charcoal, they being much the fattest, and the mest greatly superior in point of tenderness and flavor.

Gengh on Water.

The following is another of Gough's apos trophics to water. Its beauty, however, beworld-renowned lecturer:

beautiful water for me! Water! heaven-gifted earth blessing, flower-loving water! It was the drink of Adam in the purity of his Eden home; it mirrored back the beauty of Eve in the crushed and fading flower; it cools, pleasant showers from is home with the glittering stars; it descends to us in feathery storms tear-drops at night over the graves of those we love; its name is wreathed in strange,breathed by the dying soldier, for away on the torrid field of battle; it paints old forts trees in frost work of delicate beauty; it dwells in the icicle; it lives in the mountain glacier; it forms the vapory ground-work upon which God paints the rainbow; it gustes in pearly streams from the gentle hill-side; it makes swers back the smiles of happy children; it kisses the pure cheek of the water lilly, it wanders like a vein of molten silver away, away to the distant sea. Oh! bright, beautiful, health-inspiring, heart-gladdening water! Every where around us dwelleth thy meek and precious here; in the wild forest, on the grassy plain, slumbering in the bosom of the lopely mountain, sailing with viewless wings tains of more than regal splendor; home of the healing angel when his wings bend to the woes of this fallen world."

The Snow Flake.

"Oh water for me, bright water for mel

And wine for the tremulous debauchee!"

The first snow flake we have seen this season appeared yesterday. Heretofore it has snowed every winter-here or elsewhere. We are of opinion that it will snow every winter | the Union. hereafter. Is it not an eternal thing-the snow flake? Millions of centur es ago, science says, softly fell the snow flake. Continents have disappeared, but the snow flake yet comes, the emblem of indestructible loveliness

The frail, still unsullied visitors. How weak and delicate they were as they floated ages ago over the gorgeons cities of antiquity! As light | sively in the Union and American of yesterand still, and frail, do they now descend upon the lonely ruins of ancient greatness.

The snow flake has seen these hills and plains generations of forests, plants, flowers, insects, and animals throng them and pass away. It wigwam by the Father of Rivers. It saw the increase, the war, the decay of his tribes. It saw the venturous voyagers who from the civilized world first coursed these then wilderness solitudes. It will fall upon the graves of as all, and upon the dust of the grandest structures we can rear. Alike upon the ocean and the continent, the civilized and the savage land, the lofty and the lowly, the living, the dead, and forever descends the snow flake. Thus are loveliness and purity every where, forever-impartial and everlasting. The fair, downy, spirit snow flake, who could fear it? What harm can follow its noiseless, feathery fall? Yet flake on flake buries the land, becomes at length the awful glacier, and the destructive avalanche. The gentle snow flake! Once, if the sages of geology say truly, this great continent lay deep, cold, and desolate beneath it! Accumulating northward up its century march southwards, abrading the mountains, destroying river-courses, excavating valleys, transporting millions of tons of rock from its native bed, and grooving the surface of the hemisphere! God made the water and the rocks, and sent the snow flake to shape the continent, and the rain drop to finish and store it, as man's dwelling place, The snow flake proves the divine faithfulness. It is a part of that never-failing, everrecurring pulsation of the universe, by which alone joyous life is preserved. It attests the alternating seasons, the unerring clockwork of the heavens. The tiny snow flake and the remotest star are mutually related parts of

---- "that stupendous whole, Whose body nature is, and fied the soul."

Men Mantun-Makers. The last feminine occupation which we imagined would be entered upon by men was dressmaking; yet we were doomed the other day, in going into an upper room -pproprieted to the sale of patterns of basques, waists, sleeves, &c , to see a man presiding over the establishment. He was holding forth to the ladies who came there to be measured and fitted, on the comparative merit of street and house basques, rounded and pointed waists; short and flowing sleeves; double points behind and a suitable length and taper of "the darts" in front. Every peculiarity of the female form divine was expatiated upon by bim in his copious explanations; and to illustrate, be passed his fingers across the waist of a lady near, showing how the pattern ting of full and slender forms, and decides the style best uited to them. Conservatism and Nationality of Demoracy.

For instance, in e very article now under our eye, from the Enquirer, which has led to this paragraph, objection made to the course of the 'mal onte ta' and 'ul

We have been often amused at the laborious efforts made by organs and orators of this party, national only because it is in power of the General Government, and conservative from the courtesy of its own trumpetings, to establish these qualities as belonging thereto. The chambers of trade and finance are at this present time exemplifying some of the conservative elements and national qualities of Democracy, which, however, are so well understood as to call for change, and a mighty change,

The concluding article of the series he devotes to the causes of our naional troubles, which he attributes to nullification slavery and foreignism. It is an able document, and we transfer a brief excerpt upon the last head, which is as just as it is strong and cogent. It is as fol-tide of immigration from the lowest stratum of European society has for the last twenty years increased annually with such remidite and has already swelled to such an enermon volume, as to alarm every considerate patriot, native or adopted. To guard against the danger our fathers apprehended from such incongruous and disturbing affusions, they took from the States and delegated to the General Government exclusively all power to naturaliza foreigners. But that power has been so relaxed by Congress, and its national objects have been so much evaded and perverted by some of the States, as to have ceased to even check the evils it was intended to prevent. And now, although the founders of the Union, including at their head the Father of his Country, were alarmed at the immigration of twenty thousand foreigners of all classes anenally, politicians of this day not only manifest no uneasiness at the portentous tide of half a mil ion of the worst sort every year, but seem anxious that still more and more shall come American citizens. And can any one of that class of modern politicians believe that such improve American blood or American character, or elevate the standard of American mocounteract the movements of the black re- social, political, and ecclesiastical. And a large majority of the priests are foreigners exported to them by the Pope and his council. Their religion, therefore, pure in faith as it may be, must rinciples of true American independence. The American theory is that, Christianity being personal, "every tub must stand on its own bottom;" and that, consequently, every person must be permitted to enjoy perfect liberty onscience, and be indulged without disfranchisement or legal penalty, in his own relie gion, which alone can separate Church from State.
