The singing convention went off nicely. Nothing but harmony prevailed throughout the session. Sunday was well put in singing duets, trios, quartettes and choruses. We enjoyed meeting with the old singers and also learning some new ones we had the pleasure of having Alfred McKelso, once a member of this class, with us hearing his deep bass. We had only one thing to make the day a howling success and that was the presence of Felix with his fine bass and Lydia with her high soprano. There wasn't any that could fill their places. Parks Yeats was on the program, but he also was unable to get here. Will tried to fill his place, but said he could not near do it. A nice dinner was spread. Everybody had plenty and went away feeling happy or at least we hope they did.

THESE CONVICTS GOING TO COLLEGE

Forty Sing Sing convicts are taking correspondence courses ranging from agriculture to pharmacy from Columbia University, so when they leave prison they will have fitted themselves for useful lives and won't have to steal, rob or swindle to make a living, which is about the only thing a prison record gives an ex-convict a fair chance to do. If a man is not a born criminal education should reform him. No really smart man will be a criminal.—Capper's Weekly.
