Treasury Circular Relative to the New Tariff Law.

WASHINGTON, March 11. The Treasury Department has mailed copies of the new Tariff act to all Collectors of Customs, together with instructions that elicit the effect of the act will go into effect at once, and apply to all goods in bonded warehouses as well as to goods imported after the date of the passage of the act. Section 2 repeals the duties on charges heretofore added in ascertaining the dutiable value of merchandise for the purpose of assessment of duties. The act will cause a considerable reduction in the amount of duties collected, which reduction is estimated by some at five per cent of the entire amount collected.

Section 3 of the Tariff act changes the mode of assessing the value of merchandise consigned by manufacturers in foreign countries to agents in the United States, and for which there is no foreign market, and provides that the goods are specially manufactured for sale in the United States only. The law authorizes the appraising officer to ascertain the cost and value of the material employed in the manufacture of the goods, and the cost of manufacturing, together with the expenses of transportation, preparation and putting up the merchandise for shipment, and to assess the value so ascertained the basis for assessment of duties.

The sections of the Revised Statutes repealed by section 7 of the new Tariff bill are sections 2367 and 2368, and section 11 of the act to amend the revenue laws, and to repeal the Modest act, approved June 22, 1874. They are as follows:

Section 2367. In determining the dutiable value of merchandise there shall be added to the cost or actual wholesale price or the general market value at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from which the same has been imported into the United States the cost of transportation, shipment and transmittals with all expenses included from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which the shipment is made to the United States; the value of the vessel, or covering of any kind in which such merchandise is contained, and the cost at the usual rates, but in no case less than two and a half per cent, and brokerage, export duty and other actual or usual charges for putting up, preparing and packing for transportation or shipment. All charges of agent or character hereon in the purchase of a general invoice shall be distributed pro rata among all parts of such invoice; and every part thereof charged with duties based on value shall be advanced a centing to its proportion, and all wines or other articles paying specific duties by grade shall be graded a duty fully according to the actual value so determined.

Section 2368 requires that "all additions made to the actual value of merchandise for charge shall be regarded as part of the actual value of such merchandise, and if such addition shall exceed by ten per cent, the value declared by the entry in addition to the duties imposed by law there shall be collected a duty of twenty per cent on such value."

Section 2, 08 requires that "all additions made to the actual value of merchandise for charge shall be regarded as part of the actual value of such merchandise, and if such addition shall exceed by ten per cent, the value declared by the entry in addition to the duties imposed by law there shall be collected a duty of twenty per cent on such value."

Long-coming export wool's are in port excepted. With this exception, however, the operation of these provisions is uniform, and extends to all imported goods on which duty is levied.

Section 11 of the Revenue act of June 22, 1874, makes these provisions still more strict by requiring the collector, when the charges are omitted in the invoice, to make his own estimate of them and then collect the duty on twice that estimated amount. All these provisions have ceased to be law since the 13th of March.

A Burning Sleeping-Car—Narrow Escapes. PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 13. The passengers occupying one of the Pullman's cars drawn by the Western express, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, had a thrilling experience at Wilmore Station, a few miles from Altoona, when a fire broke out at the morning. The train had passed a crossing, and was nearing Wilmore, with all aboard oblivious of their danger, when a tiny tongue of flame shot out from among the curtains near the end of the rear car, gradually but surely developing into a alarm-giving blaze.

A messenger in the No. 1, Mr. Fulton, of Baltimore, who was not sleeping very heavily at the time, was aroused by the smell of the burning tapestry, and an instant later he sprung out of his berth, fully alert to the peril of the moment, and gave the alarm. Immediately all was confusion, and the occupants of the burning car tried to find their way to the door, but the train had been stopped, and the door, but finding the train still in motion pulled the bell-cord. Owing to the tight signal not being given, however, the engineer paid no attention to it until it had been pulled several times. In the meantime the wildest excitement prevailed, and the passengers ran to and fro, not knowing what to do. Several had a chance, and a number were with difficulty prevented from jumping out.

The train was finally brought to a standstill, and the occupants of the car rushed out. Some of them were in their night-dresses, while others, excited in striving through the confusion to make themselves appear respectable. The fire had not been discovered a moment too soon, as by the time the train stopped and the occupants of the burning car had escaped, and the whole sleeper was one mass of flame, and in less than twenty minutes was a heap of smoldering rubbish.

Of the twenty-six passengers who had occupied the burning car, twenty were gentlemen, four were ladies, and the others were children. Fortunately none of them were injured. As they stepped from the train they presented a ludicrous appearance, and were wrapped in blankets; others had no shoes. Among the passengers were General-Pension-Agent Dudley, Colonel Benjamin Wilson, an ex-Congressman of West Virginia; General Calkins, of Indiana; Colonel Davidson, of Beaver, Pa.; and Colonel Porter, Postmaster of Connelville, Pa.

The make-up of a number of the gentlemen was ludicrous. Colonel Porter had on one boot and one slipper, and was hatless. Colonel Davidson had his head done up in a newspaper, while Colonel Ben Wilson, attired in a blanket and bare-headed, looked for all the world like an Indian chief on a foraging expedition. General Dudley is said to have been the coolest person on the car, and by his wise counsel did much to allay the fears of the ladies and children.

The fire originated in the rear of the car, and is supposed to have been caused either by the overturning of a lamp or from the stove. Conductor Harry Hawkins, who was in charge of the sleeper, did all in his power to aid the passengers to escape, and was the last man to leave the burning car.

The loss can not be approximated. The Pullman Company estimate their share at about $25,000. The loss to the passengers was considerable in clothing, watches and jewelry. Some of them also lost considerable sums of money. Upon their arrival here the unfortunate were kindly cared for, and were soon put in presentable condition.

A CAR in the middle of a freight-train, on the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg Railroad, jumped the track a few days ago, but remained upright and rolled along for three miles, even safely crossing a long bridge, till Alama, N.
