GREAT PROHIBITION RALLY!

Hon. Frank Plumley Scores High License.

Hon. Frank Plumley of Northfield was heard at town hall last evening in an address on prohibition vs. high license. The hall was filled to overflowing and the speaker held the close attention of the audience for some over an hour. The Morrisville band gave a concert in front of the hall before the speech and occupied places on the stage during the evening. Geo. M. Powers introduced the speaker in the following well chosen words:—

The people of our state are taking intelligent interest in the temperance question—an unusually active interest. The splendid audience like the one that assembled here only a few evenings since to hear the gentleman from Rutland, bear evidence to the fact that the people are aware of the importance of the question. The men have made a most noble selection in the person whom they have chosen to answer the questions presented by the people. The man who carries in his heart a most noble interest in the community, whose whole life has been an evidence of the good law and order of the prohibitory law. Mr. Plumley is a prohibitionist because he believes in its doctrine, he is a temperance man because he believes in the principles of temperance and his life is an evidence of the wisdom of the forefathers in establishing this law.

Mr. Plumley said in part:— This old platform, if it is not the same, reminds me of the one where I used in early days to speak my orations when a student in People's Academy. It was in those student days when my habits were formed, my life fixed. I count it indeed an honor as it is a pleasure to come here on your invitation for the purpose of discussing the question which has been presented to you by your chairman as the theme of the evening. I thank the honorable gentleman for his kind and too complimentary allusions. But it will be for you to say when the evening is done how well the cause of prohibition has been presented. It is not quite just to the cause itself that one should be taken out of the busy work of his profession and come to discuss a question which has been presented by one who is making it his study and work at the present time. I have been compelled largely to draw upon the thoughts which have been with me as I have journeyed through life and upon observations in this state and in other states for the comparative results of the system of dealing with intoxicating liquors. It is not true that the prohibitionist supports the law now resting upon our statute books, because he desires to lessen the liberty of any; it is not because the present law cannot be improved and it is not because he is a man of total abstinence. We care not for the characteristics of the individual in his daily life so far as those characteristics do not affect the public. But the public has a right to demand of its citizens that they observe order. They must so regulate their lives as not to offend the safety of society or be a menace to the welfare of the community. This is the right that the state has over its citizens.

One of the great burning questions in every state, in every nation, and in every community is what to do with intoxicating liquors. It is true that the mere selling of liquor is not an offense in itself, but the place of sale becomes a place of disorder. You need have no fear that because this law rests upon the statute books anyone has any thought of what shall be eaten or drunken as such. It is because the general consensus of opinion in all civilized communities makes the open saloon a menace to the public that the law rests upon our statute books. The law that says that the public shall protect itself is as well established as any law in the world. It is that great law of self preservation, which has written upon the statute books the prohibitory law.

The only question is which is the most efficient, prohibition or high license, which procures the greatest degree of safety among our people, which gives us least of pauperism and crime, which best protects the home? When this is demonstrated all men who are patriots will support that law. I do not know how this question was discussed by the gentleman here so recently, but I know if he discussed it as a patriot he placed first the question, which is the most efficient law? and not change that liquor may be more free. And if liquor is more free will he deny the fact that the freer the liquor the more harm to the community. The increased sale of liquor increases the hazard of every community. The courts are uniform in their decisions respecting this.

Human nature is not yet perfect, and whether we live under a law of prohibition or a law of license we will find the execution of that law a difficult matter. There is nothing in license which executes itself. There is nothing in license which improves the character of the official. Did the distinguished gentleman tell you of a single instance where there was less liquor sold in a former prohibition town after it had changed to high license? Did he give you a single instance of a city bettered by high license? If he did not, on what basis could he put his appeal?

I ask, what I think I have a right to ask, if there is any one solitary man here, unless he be a seller of rum who will dare to say that he seeks an opportunity for more and freer rum? If there is one he would not speak for his heart contents him. Then the question is simply, which law will produce the lowest minimum of drink.

The same law that rests upon the state of Vermont rests upon the navy of the United States.

In Worcester, Mass., in which state blossoms the best local option law in the United States there were 3500 arrests for drunkenness in the year 1900. Where do these drunkards come from? If a man is drunk he has had some rum. Where did they get it from? Out of the saloons that were licensed? There is a violation somewhere. Are there unlicensed saloons in licensed towns?

The gentleman from Rutland would try to make rum the same as other commodities. Does he not say you may change back to the prohibitory law if you do not like license? If license prevents and prohibition is wrong, how can you better your condition by changing back to prohibition?

Does not ask you to see if you cannot walk in this path where you can get more rum and if you can't, vote back to prohibition? What is there in his contention? He says a town has a right to prohibit. Is not that taking away your liberty? But he says that it is right because the town knows better what it wants than the state knows what all the towns want. There is no question but that the best legislative unite is the state.

The high license law has certain restrictions as to hours for selling of liquors. It is right to prohibit the sale on Sundays, election day, etc., why not right every day in the week? What is the trouble in general prohibition of the liquor traffic? Won't it protect the state? By a change would the state be better protected; would our children grow up into better manhood?

Relying upon the intelligence, the virtue and the wisdom of the people. I make no question what the vote of Vermont will be. The sons of the Green Mountain Boys do not go back. If you want to find them go forward never look for them on the retreat. The state of Vermont which has thrown the banner of prohibition to the breeze for 50 years will not reverse its footsteps and plunge into the eternal abyss of free rum. We will still have better and grander civilization. We will look forward yet other fifty years and on the statutes of Vermont there will stand out in grand and golden letters "Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic."

The address was well received and the telling points were heartily applauded. The exercises closed with "America" rendered by the band in fine style.
