Accidentally Killed.

Yesterday morning Earl, the 16-year old son of Geo. Colf, residing on Simes & Harris' addition, accidentally shot and killed himself while hunting. The shot entered his side just above the left hip, and penetrated the stomach and intestines, causing death in less than twenty minutes after the accident happened. The boy was found by his father who heard the report of the gun and his cries for help. Dr. Arnold was sent for but before he arrived the boy died. The real cause of the accident is unknown, but it is thought he was standing on a log and dropped the gun, hitting the hammer on the log and causing the discharge. Coroner Monroe is holding an inquest this morning.

The Time Fast Approaches.

Dr. Ottman, the noted specialist, surgeon and physician of the firm of Dr. B. S. & Co., Muskegon, will soon visit this locality. His fame is so far reaching that it is hardly necessary to comment upon his visit other than to state the time of his arrival. This fact alone, will be sufficient to insure a large attendance on this eminent physician at his private parlors in the hotel. So wonderful his skill, so seemingly marvelous his cures, so peerless his ability that Dr. Ottman stands today unapproachable by any of his co-workers in the field of medicine and surgery. Speedy restoration to life, health, hope and happiness, has been the result that has been apportioned to thousands who have placed themselves under his care. Death seems appalling, seems utterly routed through the heretofore unheard-of skill displayed by the doctor.
By all means every suffering and afflicted one should consult with him on his visit here. Owosso, Mich., Tuesday, Nov. 2d, in the private parlor of the Wildermuth hotel, from 9 a. m. to 6:30 p. m. One day only. Consultation free and strictly confidential.

Washington Letter.

Special Correspondence:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 25, '97.

The general opinion here among politicians is that the recent charges brought against the administration and Senator Hanna, with reference to the sale of the Union Pacific Railroad, have reacted against the instigators in a way not beneficial to their interests. Statements were published in the New York World and other democratic organs to the effect that Senator Hanna had made an arrangement with the "money powers" of the east last year for the purchase by them of an inside figure of the Union Pacific, for which he had received enormous campaign contributions. The falsity of this statement is apparent upon its face, but a little investigation into the matter discloses facts which make it still further react upon the authors of the story and upon the democratic party. In the first place, the sale of this road was ordered last year by the preceding democratic administration, and the present administration is doing nothing but carrying out the plans and arrangements practically completed by its predecessor: and in the second place it is idle to talk about inside figures and favoritism, for the reason that the road is to be sold to the highest bidder whoever he may be. In order to prevent the property from going under the hammer for a less amount than would indemnify the government, an arrangement was made with certain parties that the sale should be started at a certain figure, but of course this does not prevent others from bidding higher and as much higher as the competition for the ownership of the road demands. A particular point of the so-called "deal" was made by the democrats in Ohio, and in the attempt to prejudice the voters against Senator Hanna as the prime instigator of the scheme copies of Cincinnati papers containing the article were distributed broadcast over the whole State, in the hope of catching the eye of people who would not know whether the report was false or true. Senator Hanna himself made a prompt and vigorous denial of the charge in a speech recently delivered at Cleveland in which he said: "The facts are that I never heard of the measure or the 'syndicate' or anything about it until early in July last, one year after this alleged plot was laid bare. I do not even know who are the members of the syndicate; I never had any conversation with any of them in regard to it and I never was called upon by my vote or influence to say one word in regard to the sale. It was a contract made on the part of the government by Grover Cleveland's administration, and the only part of it relating to this administration is that the contract has been agreed to on the part of the present administration on the understanding that the syndicate should give five million dollars more for it than under the terms made by the Cleveland administration. That is all I know about it, the rest is a lie." This is vigorous language but it is fully warranted by the slanderous and utterly groundless accusations made against Mr. Hanna.

The reorganization committee has in no way been shown the slightest favor or given the least advantage," said Attorney-General McKenna, whose word cannot be questioned in the matter.
"The road will be sold to the highest responsible bidder, without any reference to his personality. If a bid of $51,000,000 is made, and the reorganization committee does not increase its offer to $52,000,000, the property will go to the parties making the new proposal. The guaranteed bid was obtained to prevent the possibility of disastrous loss. If this guarantee did not exist, an opportunity would be afforded for bidders to form a combination and offer a comparatively low figure for the road.
"The increase in the reorganization committee's bid is easily explained. Subsequent to the filing of the original guarantee bid of $45,754,059 a number of overlooked contentions were discovered. These included the bridge across the Missouri River at Omaha and a number of money considerations. The bridge mortgages amounted to about $1,200,000, the lien on the Omaha and Council Bluffs division to more than $2,000,000, and other contentions brought the aggregate to nearly $4,000,000.
"In view of these contentions the decrees of the courts were unsatisfactory and papers were prepared for an appeal. At that time the reorganization committee increased its bid by $4,245,941 to cover these additional sums, thus raising the total bid to even $50,000,000. In all other respects the decrees were just and satisfactory."

Attorney-General McKenna expressly stipulates that there was no formal agreement made between the government and the reorganization committee. The guarantee bid was arranged by letters between former Attorney-General Harmon and special counsel for the committee. The agreement, he says, goes no further than to provide for the appearance of the government in suits brought to foreclose the first mortgage bonds and to bring suit for foreclosing its own. The sale of the property, he says, must necessarily be under the direction of the courts, with the whole world for bidders.
"The fact must not be overlooked," said Judge McKenna, "that the government's lien is a second one, subject to a first mortgage of $30,000,000. The advantage the government has secured is that at the sale under the decrees of foreclosure there will be a bid for the roads of $50,000,000 over and above the first mortgage, and in addition the benefit of absolute freedom of competition at the sale. The government may secure its whole claim through a higher bid. It is sure of $50,000,000, and this amount, in connection with the payments already made, will pay the principal of the debt twice over.

Something About Signaling at Sea—Curious Information Concerning the Stork—The Duped Dog.

Man's ingenuity has made it unnecessary that ships that pass at a distance at sea should do so in seeming indifference to each other's presence or needs. On a long voyage where the sight of another vessel is a pleasing break in the monotony of the daily life and in times of distress and trouble the ability to ask and answer questions, to request assistance or needed stores, is very apparent. Then, too, the fascination of "the flag," felt by the most unromantic mind, lends its influence to make the interchange of signals at sea a most interesting event.

The use of a system of naval signals such as that of the present time requires special instruction and study and is not picked up in a few minutes; neither can it be acquired by spending an odd hour now and again upon it.

It comprises different methods of conveying orders or information to or from a ship in sight or within hearing, but at a distance too great to permit of hailing—in other words, beyond the reach of the voice even when aided by the speaking trumpet.

Signals are divided into classes, according to the instruments with which they are made. There are sight and sound signals, flag, semaphore, fixed lantern, flashing, firework, horn or steam whistle and gun signals, day, night, fog and distant signals.

Signaling is not by any means a modern method of communicating. The signal codes of the ancients are believed to have been the result of much study. Generally some kind of flag was used. Shields were also displayed in a manner arranged beforehand. Some people believe that the reflected rays of the sun were flashed from these shields as with the modern heliograph.

In the middle ages flags, banners and lanterns were used to distinguish particular squadrons. They were used, too, as they are at the present time, to call officers to the admiral and to report sighting the enemy and getting into danger.

According to a writer on this subject, the British Admiral Kempenfelt in 1780 devised a plan of flag signaling which was the parent of that which is now in use.

A certain Captain Colomb worked for nine years on a flashing system of signaling which is today in general use in all fleets. This system has made it possible to handle with confidence and safety, in darkness and fog, squadrons composed of the gigantic armorclads of the day and has greatly reduced the risk of accidents.

An international code of signals has been compiled and adopted by all the commercial nations of the world. The system consists of flags and a code pennant. In using and interpreting the flags it is of course necessary to be in possession of the signal code book, in which the meanings attached to the flags and combinations of the flags are printed.

Curious Information About the Stork.
That curious bird, the stork, is common in many parts of Europe, to which it migrates yearly from its winter quarters in Africa. It is much valued in many countries on account of the services it renders in destroying noisome reptiles and unpleasant offal.

The stork is a very docile bird and soon learns to follow its feeder for any dainty morsel. When it is hungry, it crouches on the ground and seems to beg for food by its gestures, such as nodding its head and flapping its pinions. It is a very mild and peaceable bird, seldom making use of its great bill against its companions.

The stork is a great favorite in Holland and is found most useful in eating up the frogs, lizards and toads which abound in the marshes, and the people are so fond of the storks that they become quite familiar and tame and build their nests on the chimneys and roofs of the houses. The Dutch say, "A stork never builds on a bad man's house;" therefore it is a protection to a house if a stork comes and builds its nest, as no one would injure one of these favorite birds.

The stork is very fond of building its nest upon high places, such as the top of a house, a chimney or a church spire, and in the ruined cities of the east upon the top of almost every pillar a stork's nest is to be found. It is said that when the parent birds grow so old as to be bare of feathers and unable to fly and provide food for themselves the young ones will bring it to them and nestle close to them to keep them warm and protect them.

Crown Worcester China—The Bachelor Basket—Hall Furniture—Servings—Salmon as Chops.

Crown Worcester has the preference nowadays among china for the table. In making this announcement a writer in the New York Sun explains that it is the Crown, not the Royal Worcester. This china is heavy and to the unaccustomed eye ugly, but it grows in favor, and you soon like its odd shape and prim decoration. There is no suspicion of gilding or ornate work about this Worcester. The scallops of the dishes and plates may be edged about with green, or they may be left plain, and the one pattern of flowers sprayed over the surface is in rigid, set bouquets, with never a leaf or tendril straying out from the main bunch. The colors used are what are called strong, natural colors, real reds, undeviating blues, undoubted purples and greens. There is no blending. Everything is stiff, set and prim on a lusterless surface, yet this china makes the filigreed latticework and delicate coloring of the shining French porcelain look common and overdone. At least this is what you think after the new old English type has grown on you and you have noted its beauties.

Of all the quaint shaped platters, curiously curved coffeepots and mysterious looking muffin plates, each with an eyleted cover to let the steam escape, this old English china appears to have the monopoly. Ponderous is the word best suited to the great meat dishes, and the handles to their covers once seen will not be forgotten.

The Bachelor Basket.
The "bachelor's basket" is the newest gift from a girl friend to a college man, and the girls find much pleasure in making these really useful as well as dainty toilet accessories for his lordship, as explained in the New York Tribune. Usually a small, low, round basket with no top is chosen. It is lined smoothly with some bright, pretty silk. Several tiny cushions are made and stitched to the inside of the basket brim, and black and white pins and needles are stuck therein in plentiful array. A pair of small scissors, a little silk bag for buttons and several spools of white, black and colored cotton and silk thread go to complete the bachelor's sewing outfit, and, whether or not he ever takes the basket out of the box in which it is received, the giver feels assured in her own mind that Jack has every needful appliance for an emergency and is consequently happy.

Hall Furniture.
A good old oaken settle is not a bad thing for halls, with its sheer severities of paneled back and its sturdy plank footing—not easy to be sure. We do not want any cushioned luxuries in a hallway. It is rather a good place to receive "bores," if we must receive them at all, and an oaken settle of oldish and homely rectangularities does not tempt a long stay. Decorator and Furnisher says such the same concerning overwrought oaken chairs with great bulges of uneasy and recumbent carving. The hall is a good place for such, except they be inhibited by too palpable a nonagreement with other fixtures, but there is always this good in a hall, that it takes a "jumble" of things more justly and carries them more easily than other rooms.

Household Gods.
The ancient Greeks believed that the Penates were the gods who attended to the welfare and prosperity of the family. They were worshipped as household gods in every home. The household god of today is Dr. King's New Discovery. For consumption, coughs, colds, and for all affections of throat, chest and lungs it is invaluable. It has been tried for a quarter of a century and is guaranteed to cure, or money returned. No household should be without this good angel. It is pleasant to take and a safe and sure remedy for old and young. Free trial bottles at Wm. E. Collins & Co., and J. S. Haggart's.
