That is dyspepsia. It makes life miserable. Its sufferers eat not because they want to, but simply because they must. They know they are irritable and fretful; but they cannot be otherwise. They complain of a bad taste in the mouth, a tenderness at the pit of the stomach, an uneasy feeling of puffiness, headache, heartburn and what not. The effectual remedy, proved by permanent cures of thousands of severe cases, is

THE TAIN OF GAIN.

Why Our Chief Magistrate is Admired and Respected of All Men.

From Elliot Gregory's "Unavailing Wealth," in the June Century.

Although, too many of us run breathlessly after lucre, casting hardly a glance at the flowers by the roadside as we hurry on, yet when it comes to choosing a compatriot to hold the helm of state, or some other position of trust and honor, we turn instinctively to those men who have kept themselves free from the taint of gain; and logically, for when intelligent people read of a vast and sudden fortune, they are apt to ask one another if it is possible for a man to have become so very rich while quite honestly respecting all his neighbors' rights and liberties. So strong has this feeling become of late that even when the public is told of some aged magnate expiating youthful greed by giving away the millions which have turned to ashes on his old lips, the news is received with a shrug of the shoulder and often with a sneer.

On the other hand, few people will deny that the most admired man today in this country, the most respected and the most loved, is our young President, whose mind and thoughts have ever been fixed as far above financial ambitions as that of a Cromwell or a Washington. It is for this, as well as for his brilliant statesmanship, that our chief magistrate's name today has the power to thrill the nation's blood and make its pulses beat faster.

The American Protective Tariff League of New York is early in the field for the campaign of 1904. Realizing that the percentage of new voters may prove to be sufficient to turn the scale in several States, the League has mailed to its members and connections inquiry cards asking names and addresses of young men who will, next year, cast their first votes at a Presidential election. Replies to these cards are coming in by the hundreds in every mail, and the League is rapidly accumulating an immense list of names to which it will send literature of the sort calculated to inform young electors as to the merits of the questions dividing the two political parties.

The Owosso Carriage Company sprung a surprise last week by putting an automobile manufactured at its plant in this city on the road. The machine's motive consists of two six horse power gasoline engines placed over the front axle. The Owosso Touring Car is the name provided for the vehicle, which will be manufactured at the shops here.

The team of Christopher Amos, of Henderson, became frightened at the cars, Monday, while at the corner of Main and State streets and ran away. Eugene Lambert, who was on the tongue to check the horses up after drinking, fell and was badly cut about the face. Mr. Amos stayed with the wagon, and stopped the horses finally heading them against a barn.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Reece, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Allen and children, of Flint, and Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Stocum, of Fenton, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Alger, Grand avenue, the occasion being Mr. Alger's birthday. He was presented with a gold watch and chain and a gold ring.

"FOR GOD'S SAKE KEEP LETTING IT ALONE!"

Senator Hanna's Great Speech Before the Ohio Republican State Convention at Columbus, June 3, 1903.

He Stands by the Doctrine and Policy of Protection Without Qualification, Without Apology, Without Evasion.

His Cordial Indorsement of President Roosevelt Supplemented by a Declaration of Stalwart, Unwavering Republicanism.

Columbus, Ohio, June 3.—Senator Hanna disappointed the republican state convention when he was introduced as the temporary chairman this afternoon. In view of the attitude he had assumed earlier in the history of this convention on the question of the indorsement of President Roosevelt, it was freely predicted that he would justify himself in his change of attitude. He did nothing of that kind, neither did he forget the President in his address, which gratified his friends and surprised those who might be termed his political enemies.

The proper tribute was duly paid the nation's chief executive in words that burned with enology and eloquence.

Those who expected the senator to get into the pyrotechnic class were disappointed and at the same time pleased and gratified. His keynote to the convention of a republican gathering, which embraced the most distinguished men in the party, was of an entirely different character from what has distinguished similar efforts by other men who have appeared as the spokesmen of the party. It was built on broader lines and embraced views that are not circumscribed by the narrow limits of a state. His address was a calm discussion, with a decided philosophic tinge, of all the questions that have concerned the people both in the state and the nation. His only individual expression which might be termed a "slogan" was his warning to the democrats and others to "keep hands off" and not disturb the prosperous conditions that now prevail in the country.

When Senator Hanna was introduced by State Chairman J. B. Clingerman he was obliged to make repeated bows to the vast audience. When quiet was restored he said:

SENATOR HANNA'S SPEECH.

"I congratulate the republican party of Ohio upon this splendid representative body; and I speak for the republican party of Ohio the hope and the wish that your deliberations will be governed by good judgment and proper spirit. [Applause.] Standing today in the morning of a new century and looking back over that period which we have just marked as our first century, there is everything to emphasize that feeling of pleasure and pride and to make every man, whether born in Ohio or whether a citizen by adoption, feel that it has been a privilege to be a Buckeye. [Long continued applause.]

"While much of our progress and present situation is due to the hardy pioneers who hewed their way through the forests and built for themselves their homes, I claim that, in the light of experience in the last half century, we owe as much to the fundamental principles of the republican party for the benefits that have come to our people. [Prolonged applause.] Forests may stand until the end of time, the great mineral wealth may lie undisturbed for centuries, unless there be something to quicken the impulses which find a response in the hearts and ambition of every man who has a duty to himself and his family to perform.

"Without that incentive, without the return for labor and capital, there must be no result. Oh, my fellow republicans, standing on the threshold of this new century, should we not be proud and grateful that we have been a part of and connected with the party whose principles and politics have done so much for our development? [Great applause.]

HUMAN LIBERTY AND PROTECTION.
"The republican party laid the foundation stone. Human liberty and protection to American industries and the American workingman are placed in the sacred archives of our country's history and form its foundation stone.

"And since that time stone by stone has been added to that structure, every one as hard and indestructible as granite itself, every one composed in its component parts, with a mixture of principles which filled and made complete the whole. And as it was raised year by year, tried by experience, encouraged by success, today standing here in the presence of this great audience, let me point to that magnificent structure, the monument to the principles of the republican party, and let that party write the inscription upon its base in letters which all who run may read: 'Hands off!' [Prolonged applause; the delegates rising to their feet and cheering vociferously.]

"Time and patience have built that structure. The bloom and sweat of our best husbandry have contributed to it.

If we are to have a new era, or if the era of the twentieth century is to be a continuation of republican prosperity, let those who were the workmen upon that edifice 'stand guard.' [More applause.] Such a policy having been established, such a standard set, and every man who occupies that position will in the true spirit of Americanism be impelled, if possible, to excel, but never forgetting for one moment the responsibilities which are of more importance than brilliancy of effect.

EULOGY OF ROOSEVELT.

"What can be said of Ohio can be said of our nation. Republicans today can congratulate themselves that in the direction of national affairs they have realized all they hoped for and all they expected in the administration of Theodore Roosevelt. [Great applause.] We look back but a few short months, when that heroic young man, standing under the gloom of that awful tragedy at Buffalo, feeling and appreciating the responsibilities which had come upon him, and in the presence of the American people, made that sacred promise to them that to the best of his ability, with his heart full of desire, it should be his aim to carry out the policies of President McKinley. [Long continued applause.]

"And how well he has succeeded we all know and all feel, as this convention will express an appreciation of that administration. We all realize that to that young heroic president this is due, as coming from the heart, filled as he is with the most patriotic, unselfish and energetic devotion to the interests of the people and the principles of that party. [Long continued applause.]

"Standing in the presence of the American people and hearing those words, the solemn import of which indelibly impressed itself upon all who stood near him, no one can doubt his motives or even his ambition. No one can place him in the category of a man whose ambition is greater than his patriotism. [Great applause.]

A PARTY JUDGED BY RESULTS.

"Our government is a government of party. It is necessarily so and always will be so. The people, who are the final arbiters of all questions, study and consider from their own standpoint and form their ideas and opinions as to the policies by which these parties propose to govern our country.

"They are not so much interested in the theories of economies. They leave them to the doctrinaires; but what they want to judge from and judge by is result.

"As we are soon to enter upon a national campaign the people today all over the United States are watching with interest this republican convention of the state of Ohio, because Ohio enjoys the proud prestige of always having been loyal to those principles and has contributed from her forces of power and intellect many of the best advocates the country has produced. [Great applause.]

"Is there anybody in this great audience—aye, is there anybody in the state of Ohio who hesitates for one moment, under all the conditions which have gone before under all the environments of the present, under all the hopes of the future, to see one single cause as to why the republican party should change one iota in those principles? [Long continued cheering.]

"FOR GOD'S SAKE KEEP LETTING IT ALONE!"

"Human liberty, protection to American industries and our workingmen. [Renewed applause.] We started that slogan many years ago. It went forth and reached the hearts of every fireside in the land, and if we needed any additional tribute, or any accessory to add to the luster of that monument, it would be the continuation of happiness and contentment perceptible everywhere around us. I once said: 'Let well enough alone.' [Applause.] For God's sake keep letting it alone. [Renewed applause.]

"If you consider from a practical standpoint what is best for our country with the evidence of the past before you, with the object lessons around and with certain deductions as to the future which must follow sound reasoning and right principles, can we ever hope to place ourselves in a happier position as regards ourselves and our own interests? 'I say to that no, and that, therefore, in the opening of this campaign, when we are called upon to voice our sentiment, reflected from the people—so that it is their sentiment—and knowing full well and trusting in the intelligence of the people of the Buckeye state, are we not safe in starting forward to say that we have redeemed every prophecy and fulfilled every promise? [Applause.]

"And it was not the result of accident or circumstances. It was because the republican party had found early in its existence the true principles which govern the people—namely, government by the people—a policy which was only tried first as an experiment, and then through the long years of experience brought to its aid and support the best minds and the best thought of our country; that added an impetus, supported by the people, as a result of these experiences, an irresistible Americanism which could not be checked, and I give notice to the democratic party, if you get in the way we will run over you. [Great applause.]

FOUNDATIONS STRONGER AND STRONGER.

"The people are not narrow in their line of reasoning. It is a matter of pride to us that the people of this country are so intelligent, and when I hear the suggestion that the time may come, as a result of this enormous influx of immigration, that the spirit of Americanism will be contaminated by contact, I say oh, no, my friends, the institutions of these United States are upon a surer foundation, and there is a bulwark, built years ago, which stands today stronger and stronger. That bulwark is our common schools, our institutions of education, so that we are adequately prepared for all assimilation that may be necessary for any and all who may come to our hospitable shores.

"I am speaking of the relationship between capital and labor. The day is dawning when that all-important, economically important question, will be taken up, discussed and considered not purely from the standpoint of politics, but from the standpoint of humanity and society. [Applause.]

"That is simply another milestone to mark our progress in that direction, but it will not be the last. Onward is our motto as a people, and in order that that advance may be safe and sure, all the people must look for guidance along that path to those who led them and have led safely in the past.

"It is because of this that I speak hopefully of the future of the republican party, not only in Ohio, but in the nation, and I would speak in such words and with such emphasis as would inspire the minds, not only of the republicans by profession, but that of every man who from the standpoint of humanity and patriotism will and must consider the best interests of his country.

"Party affiliations do not always govern judgment. Loyalty to party may be all right when indifference seems to rule, but when the people are aroused to their own true interests, and that which most affects their own affairs, they will judge for themselves and select for themselves that which is best, and discard that which is not good."

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN THE LEAD.

"We have never failed when we have gone before the country upon that solid foundation, not of theory but of facts, and have redeemed the prophecies we made and fulfilled all that could have been expected. We say now, starting from the starting point of the twentieth century, to all the people of state and nation, this is an age of progress. The republican party is in the lead, and we have no brass band ahead of us. [Great laughter and long continued applause.]

"We are going to follow along the lines and by the straight path which we have trodden for nearly fifty years. You must accept results as proof, and if you consider, not only your own material interests, but the best interests of society and of our common country, you cannot fail to find yourselves in the ranks of the republican party, without any regard to past party affiliations, marching shoulder to shoulder with soldiers who have won the battles of the past, and who are leading on to new victories, with that banner floating aloft which proclaims the principles of the republican party." [Prolonged applause.]

No Trouble in China.

Under date of April 21 H. W. Parker has just received a very interesting letter from Dr. W. S. Ament at Peking, China. Dr. Ament declares that his work is almost too heavy for him to bear, although, like Mrs. Ament, he is enjoying very good health.

When the letter was written Dr. Ament had just returned from a month's trip to the nineteen chapels under his charge. He ordained twelve deacons and baptized thirty converts.

"The people are quiet in northern China, the doctor says. In fact, were never more friendly. All reports of disturbances are started, he declares, by renegade missionaries and others who care more for money than for christian work. He would like to see the integrity of China preserved and says her salvation must be worked out from the interior. Twelve young men who intend to become ministers are studying with him.

A huge heap of lime is in front of Dr. Ament's house. His new church, seating 1300, will soon be begun. There is a reform on in China to stop the cruel bandaging of women's feet and he believes the barbaric practice will ultimately be stopped.

Fight Will be Bitter.

Those who will persist in closing their ears against the continual recommendation of Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, will have a long and bitter fight with their troubles, if not ended earlier by fatal termination.
