Most Successful Trip of Campaign.
sion that I'm so weak physically and mentally that I am no longer fit to represent you.
"I want you to look at me. I want you to compare my condition with what the opposition is saying about it and then I want you to remember that the other stories they are telling have as little foundation as the one regarding my breakdown.
"Why, I've enjoyed this campaign so much that if they don't watch out I'll run again six years from now just to make them angry."
"Remember this—I'm a Republican. I've always been a Republican and I'm going to remain one as long as I live. I'm not one thing in Michigan and another in Washington; I'm not one thing this morning and another tonight; I'm not a wobbler, going forth with timid finger, feeling gingerly for the public pulse that I may sense the passing breeze and trim my sails to follow every whim. I'm what I am and nothing else. I have tried to represent Michigan honestly and fairly. My record is an open book and I stand by it. I would not change a vote if I could.
"But it is outrageous, the stories which have been told about the state. Can you really conceive of a full-grown man raising some of the issues which have been raised in this campaign.
"I have been accused of favoring the interests. Great word that. Did you ever stop to think what it covered? I worked for the duty on beet sugar which has resulted in building a great industry in Michigan which has brought prosperity to thousands of farmers and people employed in the factories. I have labored for a duty on articles manufactured in Michigan that our factories might continue to run and the working man be able to sell his labor at a good price.
"Those are some of the interests I have represented, but you don't hear the opposition talking about that. I very much dislike the use of the personal pronoun but it seems to be necessary just now.
"During the last session I had it called to my attention by Michigan men that if the duty was removed from linen-making machinery the linen industry could be established in this country and the flax fiber which is now destroyed after the seed is threshed out could be utilized in making linen cloth. I was shown a piece of linen, the flax in which had been taken to Ireland and there worked into the cloth. I took this before the finance committee and asked that the duty on linen-making machinery be removed for a term of years so that the industry might be established in this country, and especially here in Michigan, where capital stood ready to enter the field.
"This was objected to by the chairman of that committee, Mr. Aldrich, who said that there would be a tremendous objection from the manufacturers of linen thread. I insisted on my point before the committee. Mr. Aldrich finally yielded and the provision for the exemption of the duty on the machinery was placed in the bill.
"As a result a factory is to be established at Bad Axe which will pay out thousands of dollars yearly to the farmers of Michigan.
"It was in that connection that I made a statement that Mr. Aldrich had been a friend of Michigan industries and that he had never failed me when I asked for aid for my state.

"And I have been insulted through the length and breadth of this state for that statement, my words distorted and a false meaning given to them. I didn't think there were people who would do such a thing. It is too much like obtaining office under false pretense for me and I'll not meet them on their own ground. I just want you to remember the vilification of McKinley which took place following the passage of his tariff bill and how he was defeated for re-election to congress. His vindication came quickly, however, and he was elevated to the president's chair.
"The Payne tariff provides for a tariff board which has been appointed, and a quarter of a million appropriated for its expenses. The board will investigate conditions abroad and at home, and if there has been a mistake it will be reported at once to the President and congress when correction will be made.
"There are several things I would like to finish in congress, and am willing to take the extra burden of the chairman of the finance committee and give Michigan the benefit.
"I may not put my hand on the public pulse, but I put my hand on the truth, and do what I believe to be right. I would rather be defeated in fighting for what I believe to be right, than be elected otherwise. At times the people drift from their moorings, and parties are swept away. I believe in the tariff, and protection for American industry, labor and homes and if reelected will continue to stand for it. I am a Republican from the crown of my head to the bottom of my feet, and believe in Taft and his administration. If the 'insurgents' and opposition win in the coming national election there will be a repetition of 1892 and 1894.
"If the other man is elected there will be no insurgency in my breast, and I will step into the ranks and carry the flag of the Republican party in the years to come."
Senator Burrows spoke during the day in very complimentary terms of Congressman Fordney, whom he regards as one of the leading men in the house. He referred in his Owosso address to Mr. Fordney's work in the preparation of the new tariff law and the broad view he took as to its effect upon the people of the entire country.
