JESSE JAMES OUTDONE.

The Most Daring Train Robbery on Record.

Railroad.

A Sensational Story from Real Life which Makes Dime Novel Exploits. Seem Tame.

The most audacious and picturesque at-tempt at train wrecking which has ever oc-curred in this country took place on the New York Central & Hudson River railroad early last Sunday morning. The story as told in detail puts the deeds of Jesse James in the shade, and rivals the exploits of Claude Duval or any other of the beroes of dime novel fame.

The train on which the robbery was attempted was the American express company's special which runs every day between New York city and Buffalo, carrying noth-ing but the goods and property shipped by that company. It leaves New York each evening at 9 o'clock, arriving in Buffalo the next forenoon. One car is known as the "money" car and in it is sent the spe-cie for the Western banks, as well as the money in process of exchange between the banks of New York and the West. The valuables carried out on Saturday evening are usually more than on any other day, and often amount to over $1,000,000. The train of last Saturday night was made up of eight express cars and one ceach for the accommodation of the regucoach for the accommodation of the regu-lar train crew. The work of the money car happened to be light, and only one messenger was sent with it. This was Daniel T. McInerney, a well-known employe of the company. Each of the other cars had two messengers. The train passed Syracuse at 5 o'clock Sunday morning. When near Weedsport, a few miles beyond, while it was yet pitch dark, the suspicions of the conductor of the train. Emil Lass, were aroused by a slight whistle of the air brakes. The money car was directly in front of the passenger coach, and he went out on the platform on the rail, and looking through the hole where the bell cord comes through, he saw the upper part of a man whose face below the eyes was concealed by a red flannel mask. The mes-senger he could not see. He went back, set the air brakes and called his two trains men. The three stood leaning out from the platform, looking forward along the sides of the express car. Suddenly a man's form appeared at the side door of the excress car, revolver bullets whistled past their ears and a voice was heard command-ing them to signal the engineer to go ahead or take the consequences. The trainment were unarmed. The conductor told one of his men to jump off, run back to Jordan and telegraph along the line to Rochester that they had a train-robber on board, This was done, and the conductor signalled the engineer to go ahead full speed, think-ing that the robber would not dare to jump, and would be captured at the next stop. The train went to Port Byron. Here the brakes were set again, and the conductor and trainmen went to the express

The car showed signs of a desperate struggle. Money packages and lewelry were lying scattered about, everything in the car seemed stained with blood, and serious. The robber was nowhere to be seen and was supposed to have jumped and made good his escape. Melnerney wanted to be carried on to Rochester. A telegram for an ambulance was sent on to Rochester, and the train went on to Lyons, the next Messenger McInerney was lying bleeding stop. The news had spread all along the line by this time, and the station at Lyons was alive with people. In the crowd on the platform the trainmen saw a well-dressed young man wearing gold eye-glasses and carrying a satchel slung by a strap over his shoulder. It happened that they had noticed him at the station at Syracuse, and the natural question arose how he had got to Lyons and what he had been doing meantime. An attempt was made to seize him, but he pulled out two revolvers, held the crowd back and backed across the yard until he reached a coal train, the engine with steam up ready to pull out for the west. He pulled the pin holding the tend-er to the first car, climbed over the coal into the cab, drove the engineer and fireman out with his revolvers and started the engine. Conductor Laass and a switchman got a shot-gun, took the engine of the ex-press train, and, with the engine and fireines, though going in the same direction, ere on different tracks. As the express engine overtook the robber he reversed hisown engine and allowed the other to pass, firing at the men in the cab as they went Then the pursuers stopped and the robber went ahand firing again as he passed. Two miles beyond his steam began to out and he jumped off and started cross country, seizing a farmer's horse at point of his pistol, and two miles further on taking another farmer's horse and sleigh in the same way. By this time the farmers along the line were all out in pursuit, the roads were bad, and after a light of another five miles the robber took to the fields, and brought up in a swamp behind a stone wall where he was finally captured. He gave the name of William Cross and said he came from New Mexico. proves, however, that he is Oliver C. Perry, a well-known young desperado, ou-ly 26 years old, who robbed the money car of this same train (and the very same car) of $5300 in currency, near Utica, N. Y.. last September. At that time he sawed through a panel of the front door of the express car, covered the messenger with his revolvers, scized the package of currency, stopped the train by cutting the air-brake hose, jumped off in the darkness, and es-

On this last occasion he climbed on the roof of the train at Syracuse armed with a rope ladder with two strong–steel hooks at ne end. When the train was well under way in the open country, and running, doubtless, at 50 miles an hour, he clamped his steel hooks to the small cornice which runs along the car roof. Then he carried the ladder over the car roof until it daugled down upon the other side and opposite the sliding glass door in the car side. By this he let himself down until his toes rested on the sill of the door and then he managed to steady himself on the swaying, jolting car while he smashed in the two small lights of glass in the window, covered the Soodiana, 500 miles east of St. Johns, messenger with his revolver, and told him N. F., on the 15th and 16th of January. to throw up his hands. Instead of this, During the night a light was discovered on however, McInerney reached for the signal cord with one hand and for his revolver ing at the time. A little later the light with the other. A bullet smashed the hand on the cord, but it had given the signal proaching it was found that the vessel was that had aroused the conductor. Then a sheet of flame from stem to stern, and McInerney fired and put a bullet through the only remaining spar was the jib boom, the robber's coat. Perry is said to be the son of Oliver H. Perry, a well-known conductor at Syracuse but his father has not seen him or known his whereabouts for years. The boy got into jall at 14, then went West, served a term in prison in Minnesota, drifted about as a cow-boy, had several fights, and is credited with killing a man in an almshouse to which he was admitted. He had acted as It Happens on the New York Central the reckless way he was able to handle himself on the train.

His favorite way of "working" the public when hard up has been to profess religion and imposeon ministers, churches and Young Men's Christian associations in this way, his preference always being for the Preshyterians. It is said that he once showed up at North Adams and joined the Y. M. C. A. there.

"Didn't Know It Was Londed." James Ferrick and Wm, Landregan, two young men who worked in the same room as shoe bottomers in a factory at Lynn, Mass., and who roomed together and were close companious, attended a "Wild-West" show last Friday night. While there Landregan took a Colt's cavairy pistol which was hanging on the wall and af-ter examining it snapped the hammer sev-eral times without discharging it. In a laughing way be placed the muzzle within three inches of Ferrick's neck, and said: "Now, look out, Jim; I'm going to shoot you." The next instant his face blanched to a deathly whiteness, as a sharp report rang out in the room and Ferrick threw up his hands and staggered back, the blood spurling from a terrible wound in the throat. "My God! Jim, Jim! what have I done? I have killed him!" cried Land-regan. Ferrick fell to the floor and died without a struggle. It was found that he had a ragged wound in the neck, the car-tridge, although a blank charge, being a heavy one. The affair caused great excite-ment and Landregan's grief was painful to witness. Landregan was arrested and placed under $5000 bonds for trial for man-

Since then her broth-er has visited it occasionally to see if everything was all right. Two weeks ago when he called nothing had been disturbed, but last week Thursday be found that $2000 worth of silverware, furs and bric-a-brac had been stolen, and the furniture, mirrors, carpets, etc., damaged to the extent of $1000. The police believed that the thieves would return, and detectives cor coaled themselves in the house, and that night captured two young toughs, aged 18 and 21. They admitted that they broke into the house and that they had spent most of the time there for a week. They helped themselves liberally to the fine stock of wines and liquors, canned goods and preserves, and even kindled a fire in the range and baked bread. They occupied the best bedrooms, and slept with their minddy shoes on the silk counterpanes. In pure wantonness they broke mirrors and handsome furniture, and destroyed the car-pets. At intervals they made excursions to pawn shops with booty they stole. Most of their plunder has been recovered.

A Terrible Exhibition of Savagery in Arkansas.

A herrible story of a negro burned at the stake by a mob comes from Texarkana, Ark. Ed Coy, a big mulatto, aged 30, bentally outraged Mrs. Henry Jewell, a much respected white woman, at her house four miles away from Texarkana, on Saturday evening, Feb. 13. The negro fled, but was captured and taken to the Jewell's house where Mrs. Jewell fully heavy field him. The next afternoon, which identified him. The next afternoon, which was Sunday, he was taken from his captors and a great crowd of people marched with him to the Iron Mountain round house, where he was bound with guy wires to a big stake set in the ground. A can of coal oil was then produced and a cry for Mrs. Jewell was raised by the mob. The woman made her way through the crowd, which willingly parted for her, and in a minute was in front of the frightened negro. Without a word the spokesman placed in her hand a torch. Mrs. Jewell looked at the negro, the torch and the spokesman, and falteringly turned to the crowd. "No, no, apply it," was the cry, as she was seen to falter. The torch was then quickly ap-plied by the woman, who immediately turned and made her way through the crowd. The flames licked up around the negro's legs and he was soon enveloped, all the while yelling lustily. In seven minutes he was dead.

Some one says that one of the most interesting sights along the Rio Grande is to see a regiment of Mexican soldiers taking a compulsory bath. It is only under com-pulsion that the rank and file of the army ever do bathe, and when the ceremony is in progress one-half the regiment enters the water while the other half stands guard on the bank, rifles in band, to shoot down any man who attempts to desert. When the ablution has been finished the men re ume their places in line and guard their omrades while they bathe.
